

Laundromat disposal permit leaves Islands Trust concerned

Soap suds are causing the Islands Trust some concern lately. Phil and Yvette Valcourt applied to the waste management branch for a permit to dump effluent from a proposed laundromat in the Valcourt Centre on a site in the Fulford Valley.

The application, made last September, did not go through the Islands Trust. A permit for dumping was issued February 23.

In November, the Trust heard of the application from a disgruntled resident near the proposed dump as well as from an advertisement in Driftwood.

The trustees wrote a letter to the waste management branch asking for an explanation of the application but did not receive a reply.

The trustees feel they should have been notified because the matter concerns land use.

Harry Klassen, assistant director of the waste management branch, said the letter from the Trust had been received but the department officials had not considered it as an objection.

The effluent, from eight washing machines and two showers, will be dumped at the end of Furness Road on land owned by Texada Logging. The site had been moved from the original application location and the applicants will monitor the discharge according to how much is dumped.

The inspectors from the waste management branch will check on the site either monthly or bi-monthly.

The Trust, said planner Deanne Strongitharm, although it did not have a policy on such dumps, was concerned about the precedent being set by the permit. Trustees have also expressed concern about the amount of research which went into testing the site, as well as the monitoring programs once the dumping begins.

The waste management officials indicated that another area had been set aside for expansion of the dump site. The permit is subject to cancellation when the Ganges sewer is constructed, said the official.

The Trust, meanwhile, is discussing the matter with the pollution control people in an effort to have the permit held up until more information can be obtained.

Guilty verdict in trial for drinking-driving charge

Nineteen-year-old Bruce Aleksich of Salt Spring Island was found guilty in provincial court last week of having care and control of vehicle while impaired.

Trial took place last Wednesday before Judge G.S. Denroche.

RCMP Const. Garth Baillie testified that on the night of September 24-25, 1981, he was searching for a vehicle which had been squealing tires in Ganges.

He subsequently gave chase to a vehicle on North End Road. Baillie said he pursued the vehicle, a Thunderbird, at speeds exceeding 100 kph but at no time was he able to gain on it.

At the time he believed the car to be that belonging to Milan Aleksich.

PARKED IN GANGES

Arriving in Ganges, Baillie, who was accompanied by Const. Ace Mainwaring, parked near the Ganges Auto-Marine. Within a few minutes he observed Bruce Aleksich walking across the street with a bottle of beer in his hand.

The accused was then taken into custody, the constable said, and asked where the car was. Aleksich had told him that someone else had been driving it and he had taken it to the Aleksich home on Sunset Drive.

A search for the car in Ganges revealed that it was parked behind the Pemberton, Homes real estate office.

Baillie said that Aleksich knew at the time which of the car doors was locked and that he had a set of keys for the car on him.

DEMAND READ TOO LATE

Defense counsel tried unsuccessfully to prove that the certificate of breath analysis was inadmissible as evidence because the breath test demand had not been given soon enough.

The demand was read to the accused at the RCMP office after the search for the Aleksich vehicle. Because of the necessity of making that search, Denroche ruled, the demand could not have been made any sooner.

"It would have been different if they had been driving around looking for a hamburger," he noted.

Counsel also tried to point out that Aleksich had been drinking after he left the vehicle, recalling Baillie's testimony that the accused had a bottle of beer in his hand when he crossed the street.

NO EVIDENCE

But Denroche, in handing down his decision, said there had been no evidence that Aleksich had taken a drink from the bottle.

The accused also had care and control of the vehicle, the judge decided, because he had told police that the driver's door was locked.

"The inference is that he was standing there when the door was locked and therefore had control at that time over the vehicle."

Aleksich was fined $500 for care and control while impaired while three other charges were dismissed. They were care and control while having a blood-alcohol content exceeding 0.08, driving without insurance and misuse of licence plates.

There was insufficient evidence for conviction on the latter two charges, Denroche decided.

Discipline program to be tried

A new disciplinary procedure is to be introduced at Gulf Islands Secondary School on a trial basis.

The new procedure, known as the in-school student discipline program, will be used until June 30 as an alternative to students suspensions of less than five days.

Under the system, there would be almost no contact between a student assigned to the program and other students in the school.

The student would receive assignments from his teachers every day, and complete the work in the office area under the supervision of administrative staff.

Morning and afternoon breaks and lunch period would take place at different times from the rest of the school.

Little Red Riding Hood

Once upon a time there was a little girl who lived with her mother in a little cottage on the edge of a large, dark forest. This little girl often wore a red cloak with a red hood, and for this reason people called her Little Red Riding Hood.

One morning Little Red Riding Hood's mother called her and said, "Little Red Riding Hood, here is a little basket with some bread and butter and cocolate cookies. Take this little basket to the cottage of your grandmother who lives on the other side of the forest. Shake a leg! Don't stop along the way. Don't stop to pick flowers! Don't dilly-dally in the forest and under no circumstances, don't stop and talk with strangers!"

"Okay mother," responded Little Red Riding Hood and took the little basket and started off.

On her way to the cottage of her grandmother, Little Red Riding Hood met an enormous wolf. "Well, well, well!" said the wicked wolf. "If it isn't Little Red Riding Hood! Where is the pretty little girl going with her little basket?"

"I am going to my grandmother's," replied the little girl.

"Grandmother's sick in bed. I am taking her some bread, butter and chocolate cookies."

"Oh ho! I'd forgotten that," said the wolf, but he thought to himself, "I'll take a short cut to the cottage

BOOK REVIEW

Well written story for old and young

MICHELLE BOEHRINGER
Grade 8, Gulf Islands
Secondary School
Charlie and the Chocolate
Factory by Roald Dahl.

When Willy Wonka, the eccentric and extraordinary owner of the largest chocolate factory in the world announces that he will allow five children to visit the factory and learn its secrets, the whole world starts hunting for the five golden tickets hidden in chocolate bars that will gain them admittance.

Charlie Bucket, a poor little boy who lives with his family in a two-room house on the edge of town, would dearly love to find a golden ticket. Unfortunately his family is so poor that they can only afford to buy him a chocolate bar once a year on his birthday.

Charlie feels that there is no chance of him finding a ticket and reads enviously in the newspaper about other children who have found tickets. These include Augustus Gloop, Veruca Salt, Violet Beauregarde and Mike Teavee. There is still one more ticket to be found but when Mr. Bucket loses his job and the family begins to starve chocolate is out of the question.

The manner in which Charlie obtains the remaining golden ticket is completely unexpected and is a story in itself.

When the big day finally arrives Charlie and his Grandpa Joe are greeted with the other children by Willy Wonka at the gates of the factory and are led in.

The adventures that Charlie and his Grandpa Joe have on their tour through the factory with Willy Wonka and the other children and their parents are interesting, hilariously funny and completely enthralling. The chapters in this book are just the right length, starting and ending at precisely the right time. This book is never boring and maintains a steady flow of action.

Not only is the story well written but the verse in this book is delightful. Charlie and the Chocolate Factory is one of Roald Dahl's first books for children and it grew from being a bedtime story told to his children.

There is no age limit for this book as it will bring pleasure to anyone old or young enough to enjoy Hot Ice Cream, Lickable Wallpaper for Nurseries or Eatable Marshmallow Pillows.

The mysterious footprints

BY JASON BUSH

One day my friend Mark and I were playing with his beachball on the beach.

We were throwing it back and forth, suddenly Mark threw it too hard and I missed it.

I went to get it when I saw the strange footprints.

I yelled to Mark. He came running over and I showed him the footprints. We stood there not knowing what to do, then I said, "They just seem to come from the water."

Curiosity got the best of us, so we decided to follow the footprints.

We were following the footprints for about half an hour, we stopped for a moment because there was a log lying across the beach.

It must have been at least five feet wide. Suddenly we heard a noise from the other side. It sounded like someone or something was being dragged.

We wondered what could be on the other side. We hesitated to look but again curiosity got the best of us.

We looked over the log, and to our amazement we saw a creature walking across the sand. From the looks of it, it was smooth like a salamander and was yellow glowing, and covered with seaweed.

Its back was facing us so we couldn't see its face.

We climbed the log. I went over first. When Mark came over he lost his footing and fell. The sea creature turned around but we had dived into the sand.

Through the sand I saw its horrifying face. One giant green glowing eye and several razor-sharp teeth. It started on. Mark and I got up and followed again.

The sea creature went into the water, and we decided to go as far as our necks. We got as far as our necks when we dove under. Mark and I were both great swimmers and can hold our breath up to two minutes.

Under the surface we saw the sea creature walking and it started into an underwater cave.

We went into the cave still swimming. It was a winding passage through the rocks.

We came to the surface and were in some sort of cavern.

Mark and I saw the sea creature entering a tunnel. We got out of the water to see where the sea creature was headed.

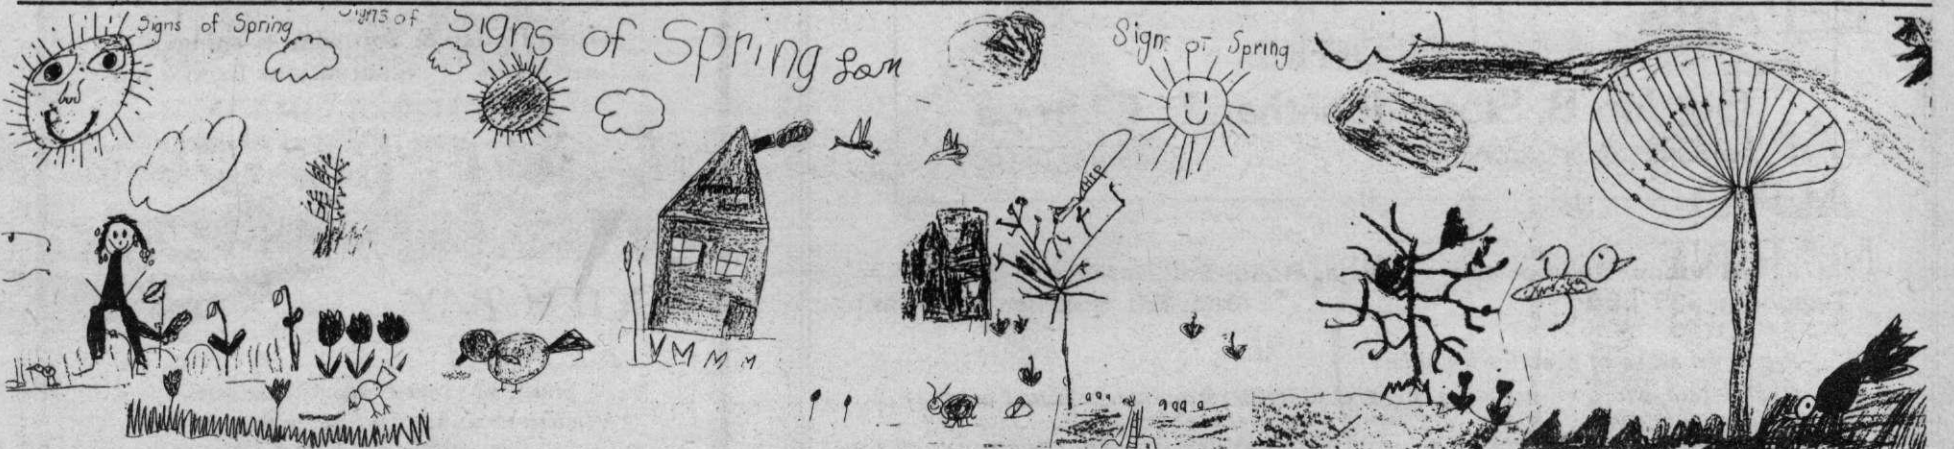

We were walking down the tunnel and came to another cavern, but this one had all the precious stones and minerals you could imagine.

Mark and I took as much as our pockets would hold.

We took sapphires, emeralds, rubies, diamonds, gold, silver and bronze.

We noticed the sea creature wasn't around. We were just about to leave when at the entrance of the cave was the sea creature.

It was all over for Mark and I.

Nuts, vegetables and fruits are blossoming on the ice

BY DARREN DAFFODIL

"The way I saw it, Paul (Sinclair) played with the puck for 40 minutes and was nice enough to let the other 30 guys in the game use it for the other 20. He's not a selfish kid, you know."

— Bernie Reynolds, Salt Spring Slugs

Ah yes, spring, the time of renewal, re-birth, all the little nuts and acorns sprouting. Here in the Slug camp all our nuts and vegetables (not to mention Fruits) are blossoming into bountiful array, bringing out what's best about the Slugs.

Take Ron Moger, for instance (won't someone, please?), McMillan-Boedel's crop-dusting program has really worked, so now Vishnu Ron looks more like Rubby Ron — little hair stubbles all over his face, ears, nose, teeth, etc. Ron is a little upset, though, that they may have to spray for spruce budworm infestation, but what the hey, Ron, that's life when you're a hardwood.

GOING INTO HIBERNATION?
Then there's Mel, looking more like a bear going into hibernation than coming out — back from a four-week session at the Block Brother's Academy for Morally Troubled Realtors, albeit a rare affliction in these difficult times (one week of confessionals, three weeks of tax dodges). It was hard to recognize him there in the dressing room dressed in rags but harder to miss out there on the ice... (and you can take that anyway you want).

At any rate, I could go on and on — Gaines stirring it up using a most unusual mixer, Sinclair playing catch me with his puck on a string, Jukes crunching people with wild abandon in a no-contact league and the Cruiser being — what else — the Cruiser — all our little acorns shining in the glory of the springtime.

PICKED NOSTRILS

And that springtime spirit helped too, as the Slugs came from behind to pick the Nanaimo Nostrils 8-6 at Fuller Lake.

A great game with lots of end-to-end entertainment, particularly from Peter "the Jet" who scored a pair on his patented end-to-end rushes. Singles went to Mad Dog, Bernie the Block, Danny Akerman, Terry the Stringer, and Vishnu Ron. A couple of great game-ending saves by the Farm Boy, too.

Up next, our final regular game of the year, a grudge match against arch-rivals, the Mill Bay Saints. Hard to believe we only started seven months, five days and three hours ago. How time flies!

Historians meet

The Gulf Islands Branch of the B.C. Historical Society met in the Community Hall on Saturna Island on Sunday afternoon.

Members listened for an hour and a half to Dr. Tony Kingscote talk on life and adventures in the Gulf Islands from 1910-1920.

Kingscote, now in his 80th year, remembers emigrating from Britain to the Saanich Peninsula in the first decade of this century, his family attracted by Canadian Pacific posters.

They did not find the promised wealth but did experience an interesting and adventurous life bush-farming in the Cowichan area and exploring the Gulf Islands by boat. Dr. Kingscote is now engaged in taping his memoirs and having them transcribed for inclusion in archives.

The Gulf Islands Historians will hold their annual general meeting on Sunday, Apr. 25 in the Saturna Community Hall beginning at 1.30 pm. A series of slides of historical or natural interest will be shown. Membership fees are due, the amount to be set by the meeting.

Pleads guilty to two charges

"I hope things go well for you from here on in," a 21-year-old man was told in provincial court at Ganges last week.

Judge G.S. Denroche made the statement when he passed sentence on Garth Neumaier, charged with possession of stolen property and care and control of a vehicle while impaired.

Neumaier pleaded guilty to both charges, which were laid after an accident on Lower Ganges Road March 3. A 1978 GMC pickup had gone off the road near Foxglove Farm and Garden Supplies. Investigation by RCMP revealed that the truck had been stolen in Delta. Driver of the truck was Neumaier.

He was fined $450 on the care and control charge and given a suspended sentence on the stolen property charge. He was also placed on probation for one year.

Pender artist guest speaker

BY ELEANOR HARRISON

Guest speaker last Wednesday evening at the Pender Islands Art Club meeting was G.H. Glyde.

Mr. and Mrs. Glyde have lived on Pender for 16 years.

A well-known Canadian artist, Mr. Glyde was with the University of Alberta fine arts department and until recently spent six weeks every summer at the Banff School of Fine Arts where he was professor of visual arts. Three years ago a new building was named in his honour.

Mr. Glyde introduced his talk on the subject of "line". Line is something we all use when we write our names. Some go at it as if they were holding a chisel and others as if they were holding a feather. Line can be very rhythmic, very staccato or thick and spongy.

Line, when it started, was fairly crisp. Down through the ages it became an edge of a pattern. As time went on it became spongy and crisp and then sort of half-spongy, rather soft and then just a shade. Line then became something that was thought out and became the edge of a plane.

A plane is a flat surface, but when we add lines, light or dark, thin or fat, or spongy, we begin to see something in space, a series of dancing patterns, either light or dark tones.

Lines often have to be cut or changed around into shapes so that you have a line that will go over a form, and over a form again and again. We find then that this line has pulled everything together, instead of being just a straight line.

Glyde illustrated this with different lines, producing a figure of a man planting his garden. The spongy lines give a certain amount of solidity and the resultant forms belong together as a family. Dark lines give a feeling of a dark background, lighter lines give the impression of the edge of a dark plane against a half-tone background. Sometimes the artist leaves the line out to make it appear solid so that it fits the shape — a silhouette.

"You can't afford to merely copy the values that you see in front of you, but you just try to invent some way of giving the impression that this or that belongs in the space by actually giving weight to the line itself," said Glyde.

Lines form into patterns and we now see a value of shapes. To illustrate this Glyde drew a few lines and a second man emerged kneeling below the first one. This is a question of using the edges (lines) of your forms to start the thing moving. As with your handwriting the artist has to work as loosely as he can and in so doing will appear the unit of the whole plane. Don't let details bother you. It's the movement of the line that counts, he said.

Costs must be apportioned

Money to cover the pay of directors and costs of administration must come from all parts of the Capital Regional District.

The message came back from senior staff of the ministry of municipal affairs as a result of a query by Dave Hill, director for Central Saanich. He had asked if it were possible to amend or create letters patent to allow an electoral area or a member municipality of the CRD to be charged directly for the remuneration of the directors from that area.

The Municipal Act is specific on the point and states that the pay and administration costs "shall be apportioned among all member municipalities."

The ministry officials stated further that if such a request came to them, they would have no choice but to refuse it as being outside the power granted to the provincial government.

Sixty attend ladies' opening luncheon

BY PAT DOHERTY

On March 23 the ladies had a lovely opening luncheon at the Salt Spring Golf Club.

There were 60 ladies in attendance when ladies' captain Barbara Maguire called the meeting to order.

Malcolm gave his annual talk on rules, which was followed by the business meeting. Among the items discussed was the new Terry Fox Mixed Tournament open to members, guests and friends. Proceeds go to the cancer fund. The event will be held on July 1.

The "White Trophy" mixed tournament will be held this year at Pender Island on August 8. This is an old trophy revived by Ardmore last year, just that club and Gulf Islands clubs participate.

Salt Spring Ladies Annual Open Invitational will be held May 6 and 7. Lorna Pentz is tournament chairman, and her assistants are Helen Insley and Jean Hopkins.

Mary Clements, captain of the nine-holers, told her group she expects an increase over last year's 39 members. Lil McNulty, seniors representative, reported that off-island button matches have been divided into two divisions, and will be played Mondays in Victoria. Inter-club matches have been divided into two divisions also.

The new golf club fixture cards are now available in the Pro Shop, and everyone is advised to pick up a free copy. This way you can plan the events you wish to enter, and also save yourself the embarrassment of coming out to play when a tournament is in progress.

Softball meeting Thursday at Ganges

Soon the cry will ring out over the playing fields of the Gulf Islands, "Play ball."

The initial meeting of softball fanatics will occur Thursday at 7:30 pm in room 302 in the Salt Spring Elementary School. To find the place, hang a right at first base and cross the hall from the activity centre.

Everyone who intends to participate in season's play should plan to attend the meeting for discussion of such topics as: the budget; umpires' clinic; the season-opening tourney; roster rules; as well as the question, should players be permitted to play in two leagues?

Time is running out for out-of-shape shortstops: the first tournament pitches off on the May 1 weekend.

Mind, body float freely in flotation tank

Experience is like no other sensation

BY BILL WEBSTER

The tank. It conjures ideas of sensory deprivation but don't say that to Demian Turner, Simon Webb or Michael Armstrong.

The three Salt Spring Islanders are currently creating a prototype of a flotation tank for sale either to individuals or businesses. They have met with sufficient success so far that they are considering opening their own centre for the tanks in Vancouver.

The tank is basically a large rectangular box containing salt water but is actually much more than that.

The box itself is made of formed plywood covering a lead shield enclosing a foam-covered interior. Each layer aids in cutting down noise and vibrations from outside which may distract those inside.

The idea, after all, is to isolate the individual using the tank.

53% EPSOM SALT

The liquid, about 150 gallons of it, contains 53% epsom salt and has the same consistency and buoyancy as the Dead Sea in Israel. It is only 10 inches deep but can support the weight of a 300-pound person. The temperature of the solution is kept at or near body temperature and ranges between 93 and 95 degrees F.

Relaxation is the key to using the tank and the experience inside is like no other sensation one could seek. Imagine the weightlessness of space coupled with the warmth and security of a womb.

"It's whatever the person needs," said Turner of the experience. "Some may use it for a womb but others prefer it for meditation."

The idea which developed into the contemporary flotation tank began in the early 1950's in Montreal at McGill University. Experiments were carried out to cut an individual off from as much external sensation as possible.

Those involved in the experiment were strapped down on a bed and rendered immobile by rigid devices on the joints. The person was left alone in a darkened room for hours at a time.

PROVED TO BE NEGATIVE

The term sensory deprivation originated with those early experiments which, understandably, proved to be very negative.

The idea lay dormant for a number of years until the United States space agency NASA began to study the effects of weightlessness in space.

Dr. John Lily began tests on the subject using volunteers. They were suspended in a large tank of water but the results did not prove to be satisfactory because of the need for breathing devices and restraints to keep the body underwater.

Gradually the research refined itself to focus on water with a high saline content.

Inside the tank, the body lies comfortably supported by the liquid. The muscles relax and the heart pumps more freely due to not having to cope with gravity in the normal way. The inside of the tank is completely dark. The person is alone.

The skin feels the solution. The eyes strain to see. The ears pick up minute sounds of miniature waves lapping at the sides of the tank. Gradually relaxation comes.

MIND FLOATS FREELY

The mind takes over. Unfettered from the daily barrage of sensory excitements, the mind floats as freely as the body. Problems can be reeled through and questions picked apart with a clarity and conciseness not to be found outside the tank.

"It's become the western approach to meditation," said Turner, and inside the tank you know he is right.

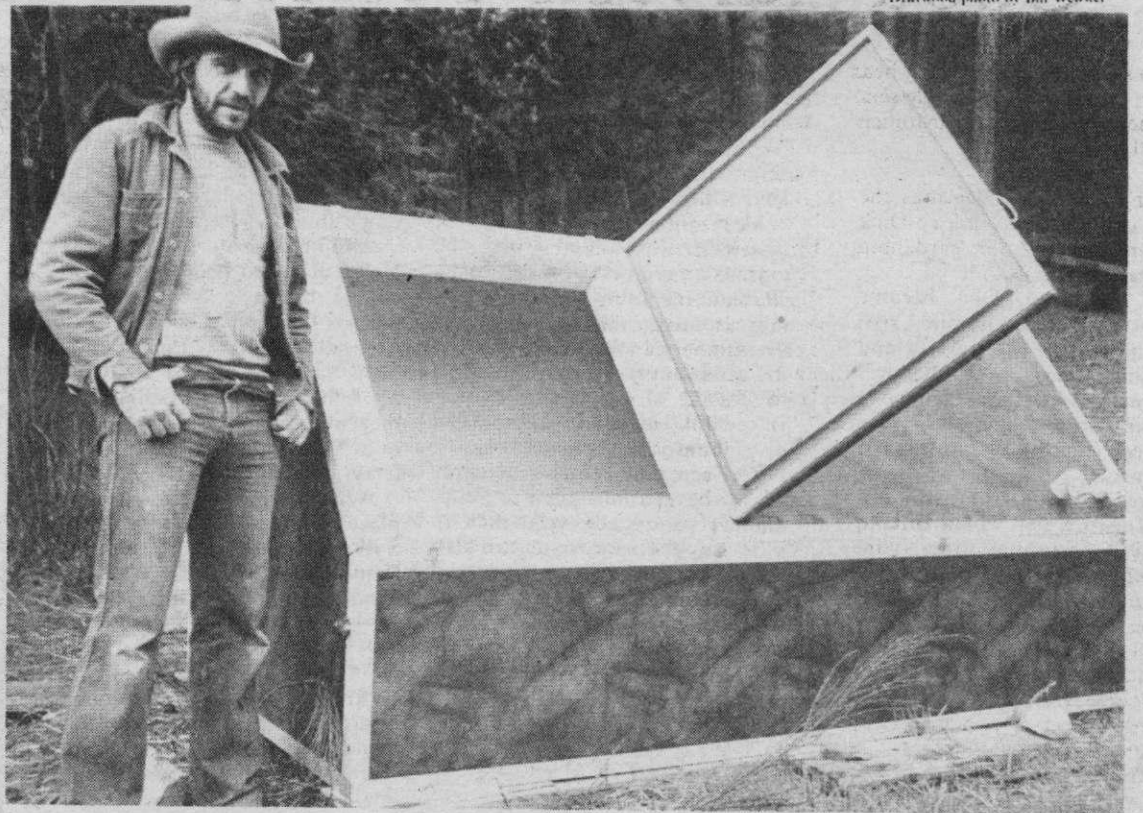

The tank has been used for experiments in accelerated learning, stress reduction and just plain relaxation. The potential has just been tapped.

Turner, Webb and Armstrong have added an innovation of their own to the tanks which they build. A sound system is incorporated in the design. Soothing music can be piped in. The floater can discourse on his experiences in progress and have the dialogue recorded on tape.

Air in the tank is circulated slowly through a series of baffles connected to a fan unit. The baffles help keep the exterior noise to a minimum.

The solution in the tank is run through a filter and cleaned after each person has completed his stay in the dark.

The tank proved successful in test runs last fall and Turner said

Demian Turner shows the latest in flotation tanks which he, Simon Webb and Michael Armstrong have been building. The design features side entry and is finished in padded upholstery. The Salt Spring residents have been designing and building the tanks since their interest in them was perked about a year ago.

that sales of the units, priced up to $2,800, have been promising.

It is, perhaps, an appropriate business venture in the use of salt water for the historic island of salt springs.

Funding delayed

School construction projects at Galiano and Mayne Islands are being held up while the school district awaits the release of funding by the provincial government.

Trustee John Zacharias reported at last week's school board meeting that the projects were among those being examined by a government committee.

The capital project review committee, initiated last month, is expected to complete its review this week, at which time funding should be released.

Good harvests possible without fertilizers

I am so excited I can hardly bear it. The Troy-Bilt tiller people send out a news sheet to their customers several times a year.

Their spring issue features the results of a 10-year trial by Dick Raymond, the senior gardening consultant for Troy-Bilt.

Ten years ago, Dick became very concerned about soil depletion, increasing salinity and increasing prices for chemical fertilizers. With his extensive gardening knowledge, Dick was convinced that there must be a better way.

What he set out to prove was a way of gardening which offered complete independence from fertilizers. And he has done it. He has proven that excellent results can be maintained indefinitely without any added fertilizers, without manures, compost, leaves or mulches. Nothing was added to the gardens from elsewhere, except a bit of lime.

'ETERNAL YIELD'

His gardening system depends entirely on crop bearing green manures, and he calls it the "eternal yield" system.

In 1972 he started eight plots measuring 24 by 24 feet. He sowed them to a variety of green manures, such as soybeans, peas, clovers and rye grasses. These were tilled into the ground and the following year the plots were planted to corn, a crop which makes heavy demands on soil fertility.

This two-year rotation was then repeated year after year. All crop residues were returned to the plots, but nothing was added to the plots other than a bit of lime when necessary. All plots had soil tests performed by the co-operative extension every year, and all tests showed satisfactory results.

Dick then proceeded to vary his systems on different lots to evaluate various methods.

The most productive system provides produce from the green manures as well, and it goes as follows: one-half of the garden, a 12 by 24-foot area, was sown to bush peas early in the year.

HARVESTED FOR ONE WEEK

The peas were harvested for one week only, upon maturity, yielding more than two bushels of peas. The peas were then tilled under while still green and followed by green or yellow snap beans, also of the bush-type.

These were harvested over a one or two-week period and then tilled under while still green. This was followed by annual rye grass. Annual rye grass dies over the winter and the dead organic material was then tilled into the soil the following spring.

In the meantime the other half of the garden was planted to a complete variety of garden vegetables, including such heavy feeders as corn, cabbages, squash and cucumbers. In the fall the veggie patch was sown to rye grass as well.

REVERSED

In the following year the two sides of the garden were reversed, with the vegetable side now being sown to the pea and bean green manure crops, and the vegetables moving to the previous year's green manure side.

It is essential that bush peas and beans are grown in this system as these come to maturity faster than the climbing types and allow the pea and bean succession in one season.

It is just as essential that they are tilled into the soil while still green as their nitrogen content is highest then. Soils underwent a yearly analysis and everything checked out very satisfactorily including trace element levels. To date no deficiencies of any kind are evident.

Dick usually tills twice: once to till under plant residues and the second time just before planting, to discourage weeds. He then leaves the peas alone until harvest time.

Farming and Gardening

BY PETER WEIS
Foxglove Nursery Consultant

On the other crops this method cuts his weeding time in half. He also rotates the vegetables by families in a four-year rotation to balance nutrient use and to avoid insect and disease infestations.

Vegetables families are as follows:

Tomato family: tomatoes, peppers, potatoes and eggplant.

Cabbage family: cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower, brussels sprouts, kale, collards, kale and radishes.

Vine crop family: cucumbers, squash, pumpkin, melons, gourds and luffas.

Onion family: onions, leeks, garlic, shallots and chives.

FEW PURCHASES

The only purchased items for this eternal yield system are the seeds, some lime and bacterial inoculant to provide the bacteria which generate the nitrogen with the legume crops.

So here is proof that good harvests are possible without any additional fertilizers. Here is the beginning of a new approach to agriculture, the return to the way of nature, which has made our being possible and which has nourished us for so long and so well.

Of course, we can still add manure, leaves, compost and clippings to bring our gardens to a high level of fertility and health.

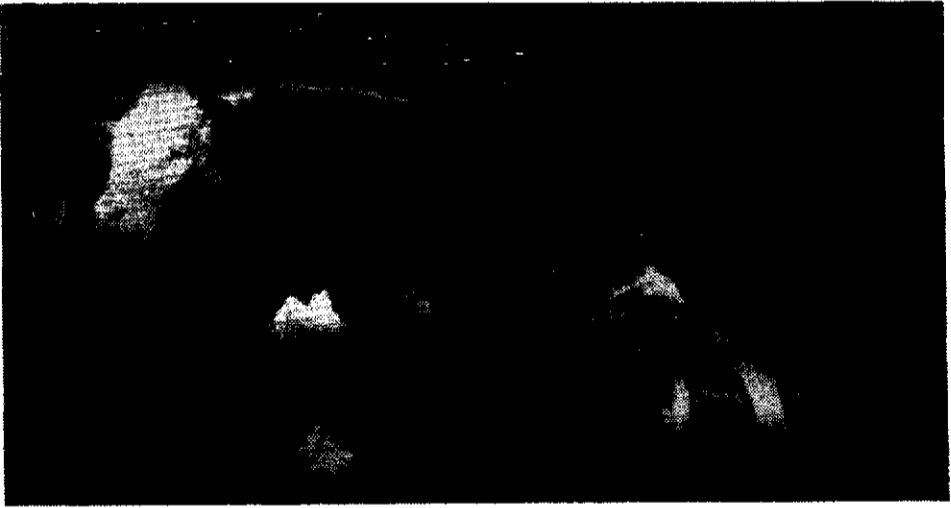

But once this is achieved very little additional material is required and intelligent co-operation with mother nature will provide it, free of charge.

Western farm paper looked at island veterans

Arthur and Joan Millner are enjoying retirement in their Scott Road home. For half a lifetime they have been living, and working, on Salt Spring Island.

In the years following World War Two the Millners moved their turkey farm from the mainland and set up near Ganges, opposite the golf club.

In February, 1956, Ernest MacGinnis wrote the story of the Millners' turkey farm in the Family Herald and Weekly Star.

Here is reprinted the farm paper's summary of establishing and operating a poultry farm under the Veterans' Land Act.

Arthur Millner has worked for many years for the Anglican Church on the island and Joan was nursing at Lady Minto Hospital long after the turkeys had been eagerly gobbled up.

hens, chickens, poults and turkeys this seems a foolish question. The proximity of city markets in Vancouver and Victoria and a continuing demand for top quality poultry products along with the favorable weather factor and the natural water barriers to infectious disease all constitute pretty sound favourable arguments.

Capt. T. A. Millner has a poultry farm on the paved highway about a mile from the commercial centre, Ganges. He is a full-time operator with 3,000 turkeys and aiming at 6,000 eventually. The farm comprises 92 acres under the Veteran's Land Act and 114 acres acquired by private purchase. About 35 acres are under cultivation, and at present much of the remainder may be classified as bush and mountain, but has considerable potential value as land for future development and is increasing in value.

SHE WORKS HARD

Mrs. Millner, who was a nurse, is active in the farm operations and even runs the small tractor.

This summer she took six weeks time out and went to the Civil Defence school at Arnprior, where she had three weeks in "basic rescue" routine, representing the Salt Spring Island group. She says it is a fine way "to keep the brain active", and is an example of the community effort on a small island.

Last year's crop amounted to 3,000 broad breasted bronze, part of which were disposed of through the usual channels, but the Millners look forward to the day when they will have built up a direct to the consumer business. They already have established a nice list of customers, to serve which and additional people, they have installed a freezing unit to accommodate 500 lbs. of cold turkey, eviscerated, of course. In actual operation this means having on hand at all times a variety of weights to suit all requirements as to size and weight.

GAS BROODERS

At least $5,000 is invested in equipment alone. City light and water is laid on the place but they use rock gas for the brooding. Nine cats prowl the place as rat catchers and, of course, there is a dog. There are no rats. A neighbor says that his cats visit adjoining places, catch rats and bring them back to their home farm to let the folks know they are still on the job; and how lucky they are, as the rats do terrific damage in the feed rooms and on the livestock if they get a chance.

This, incidentally, is the Millner's fourth turkey farm location. Originally at Newton near Vancouver, then to Burquitlam in the same area, where encroaching residential areas turned their eyes to one of the smaller islands in the gulf and finally to Salt Spring, where they might paraphrase the Lotus Eaters, "our island home we will no longer roam."

Col. C.W. "Cy" Peck, V.C is 84 and recovering from a bout of respiratory trouble. The name is a household word in the whole Salt Spring Island area because of the personality of the Colonel, and because the ferry to Vancouver Island from Fulford Harbour is named after him. The other ferry runs west from Vesuvius to Crofton.

Here, on Salt Spring Island which lies between Vancouver and Victoria, though not on the regular shipping lanes, about 30 have settled under the terms of the Veteran's Land Act.

Passengers on boats passing through the gulf or slipping through the air in planes may wonder what kind of people live in these little hamlets, what they find to do, how they earn their living and what are their contacts with the outside world.

BUDGET CUTS will cripple education

EDUCATION...UNDER ATTACK

Cut programs mean a loss to your child forever

Budget cuts in education show up in program cuts for children.

The quality of the educational program is reduced. Sometimes a program has to be dropped from the curriculum. But the child feels the loss forever.

"I know what the children in my classes need for a good standard of education. Cutting the budget will reduce the quality of the educational program."

A budget cut of $285,000 could well mean:

- larger classes, less personal attention
- more split classes
- enriched programs reduced
- counselling services reduced
- French programs cut
- reduced sports programs
- educational field trips reduced
- learning disabled children receive less help
- educational field trips reduced

Time is running out.

Speak up now for education. Let your local school board and your MLA know that you won't allow children to be shortchanged by budget cuts.

Gulf Islands Teachers' Association

Fossil fuels for the future

The winner has been named in the Salt Spring Rotary Club's Adventure in Energy essay contest.

Dan Fraser won a trip to Edmonton for his entry in the contest, which was open to all Grades 11 and 12 students at Gulf Islands Secondary School.

Fraser also impressed the club members with his presentation of the essay at a recent meeting of the Rotary Club. Three other students presented their essays to the club.

The following is the text of Fraser's winning entry.

BY DAN FRASER

We Canadians have been very fortunate throughout our brief history. We have faced war, depression and internal strife with courage and determination and have emerged as a proud, strong nation.

But another crisis threatens our country and deliverance lies not in our courage and determination but under the fields and mountains of the land itself. For Canada's vast reserves of fossil fuels, coal, oil, and natural gas, may rescue us from the crippling effects of an impending energy shortage.

But unless we recognize the importance of all three fuels and utilize our coal and natural gas as major energy sources we may find ourselves out in the cold in the not-too-distant future. Should we give these resources the attention they deserve they could provide us with energy well into the next century.

A lack of supply may never threaten the coal industry in this country. At present usage levels, the coal in British Columbia alone could last for another 4,000 years. PROVIDES NINE PER CENT

This is very impressive but loses some of its glitter when one considers that coal only provides nine per cent of Canada's energy requirements. Even less heartening is the fact that with modern technology only one per cent of this coal is accessible by mining. Still, four or five billion tons of coal could provide us with energy for many years.

Yet, at one point in our recent past, coal was nearly phased out as an energy source in Canada. In the 40's it provided 50% of our energy needs but it hit a terrible slump in the 50's. Oil, cheap and plentiful, had replaced coal.

The greatest blow came when the railroads switched from steam-powered engines to diesel engines. In 1965, British Columbia and Alberta signed contracts to export their high-grade, low-polluting coal to Japan for use in its steel mills. This rescued dwindling coal interests and gave the industry a second life.

Still, coal's comeback has been very gradual. Its major use is in electrical generator plants in Ontario and Quebec. Considering the rising cost of producing oil, it would seem illogical that coal play such a small role in Canada's energy picture.

PLAGUED WITH DRAWBACKS

Unfortunately, coal is plagued with drawbacks. When it is burned, raw coal emits dangerous chemicals, which cause acid rain and are hazardous to human lungs. Strip mining causes extensive damage to land and underground mining has had its share of disasters.

With a law passed ordering coal industries to repair sites before they abandon them, one of these problems has been solved. Hydraulic mining (cutting the coal with a high-pressure water cannon) has increased production and decreased the hazards of mining.

Two promising developments may solve coal's emission problems. The first, called liquefaction, can convert one ton of coal into three barrels of crude oil economically. The second development is clean-burning energy pellets, called Solvent Refined Coal.

The fuel of the past, coal could serve us very well in the future, if we give it a chance.

Natural gas is free of coal's problems but still plays a distant back seat to oil. Perhaps the potential of gas has been neglected as well. Although it is the cleanest and easiest to produce of the fossil fuels and is more plentiful than oil, natural gas supplies only 18% of our energy needs.

WAS BURNED OFF

Until the 50's this precious resource was burned off as a waste product of oil. The main obstacle, transporting the gas, was solved in the 50's with the building of several pipelines. Today, gas fuels industries, heats homes and runs electric generators.

Alberta supplies 80% of the product but other provinces are showing promise in this resource, especially Nova Scotia, where a major gas field has been discovered near Sable Island. Natural gas may not become the fuel of the future but the support it can give to the other fuels should not be ignored.

Perhaps the importance of developing our coal and natural gas has been belittled by the comforting but misleading oil reserves that lie untouched in Alberta. Figures and estimations can be very misleading. If every barrel of oil under the fields of Alberta could be extracted, the total would last Canada for another 200 years, a very snug period of self-sufficiency.

The total reserves in Alberta could be well over one trillion barrels, the present accessible world reserves are only in the vicinity of 600 billion barrels. Very pleasing. With modern technology only three per cent of Alberta's trillion barrels are recoverable. Not as impressive as the other figures.

TO RUN DRY

With Alberta's present wells expected to run dry within the next 10 years, most of these trillion barrels must be located in a form other than pockets below the surface. Unfortunately, this may bar us from unleashing the tremendous potential which these reserves have to offer to us.

The merit award winners in the Adventures in Energy Program sponsored by the Rotary Club of Salt Spring pose for the camera at

Foerster, Rotary president, Elaine Dawes and James Houston. Fraser won a trip to Edmonton for his efforts.

For the crude oil is mingled with sand in a mixture called bitumin, or tar sand. Over 90% of the tar sand is too deep for mining. Scientists have been studying this problem since World War I and have failed to produce a method of reaching all of this oil.

Two new proposals are expected to go into operation in future tar sand developments. One involves pumping steam deep into a tar sand field. This frees the oil from the sand, making it much easier to raise to the surface. The other process is called fire flooding. A well is drilled into a tar sand field and the bitumin is set on fire.

Air is pumped through a second well to fan the fire and increase the temperature underground. Vapours are trapped at the surface where they cool and condense as crude oil.

NOT ONLY IN ALBERTA

Canada's oil resources are not limited to Alberta. Neither are the problems. The Beaufort Sea to the north promises some 32 billion barrels of crude oil but offshore wells cost $50 million, each.

Until this last week, the greatest threat to the Hibernia oil project off the coast of Newfoundland had been the tremendous icebergs which roamed the area, capable of tearing oil pipelines and rigs. The possible damage to the Grand Banks fishing grounds resulting from an oil leakage could be disastrous.

But the first backlash to the project's progress has been much greater and costlier, with the loss of an entire rig and its workers to stormy seas. This tragedy may be a drastic setback to offshore drilling and the oil industry in general.

The uncertainty of oil's progress over the next 20 years leaves a vital gap to be filled in Canada's energy future. Fortunately, we are equipped to bridge this gap, but we must build now if we plan to enter the next century with the comforts upon which we now depend so heavily.

Petition delivered to Curtis

Pender resident Anne Forbes, representing an ad hoc Pender Island group, met with Finance Minister Hugh Curtis last Wednesday when she journeyed to Victoria to present a petition from islanders asking for a review of the assessment system.

Forbes was chairman of the meeting held earlier in the month when assessment chief Bill Craven came from Victoria to explain the present assessment system to a meeting of 70 islanders.

Curtis said he was hopeful that the government's budget on April 5 will bring satisfaction to everyone.

On average, Pender households will pay $122 less this year for school taxes, Forbes reported on her return.

To step up enforcement

There have been too many traffic accidents on Salt Spring Island lately and Sergeant Mitch Hanks of Ganges RCMP said enforcement of the Motor Vehicle Act will be stepped up.

The highway patrol division of the Sidney RCMP sends cars to Salt Spring on a regular basis and the police will be checking driving habits as well as the condition of vehicles.

Speeders are also warned to slow down. The radar setup will be in increasing use with the coming of warmer weather.

Sergeant Hanks asks drivers to buckle up and drive safely.

New year's party staged

Mahon Hall at Ganges was the scene of a new year's celebration March 20.

About 100 adults and children gathered at the hall for the Baha'i New Year, Naw Ruz.

A program of entertainment included Sue Bowler's ballet class, with dancers Alana Bergstrom, Daya Filkow, Kirsten Luker and Joey Moger. Michelle Boehringer performed highland dances and Louise Beijk led a number of people in folk dancing.

A karate demonstration was given by Franz Beijk, Enrigue Orsono and Alex Neish.

Musical entertainment was provided by Madge Kimball on piano, Enrigue Orsono on guitar, Scott and Connie Bergstrom with guitar and voice, Morven Neish on harp and Jody Lehman and Kevin Wilkie on guitars and flute, with vocals.

Recitations were given by Pete Burtt and six-year-old Laura Bergstrom.

It was the second annual Naw Ruz party to be held at Salt Spring Island.

World Relief Tea

Annual event is good example of co-operation among churches

Contributed
BY OLIVE MOUAT

The World Development and Relief Tea is an example of co-operation among churches and community. This year the Anglican Church is the host church and bears the greatest weight of responsibility.

Last year it was the United Church. Before that, the Community Gospel and the Roman Catholic Churches took their turns to make the plans and take the brunt of the decisions.

About two months ago the first planning meeting was held and since then two more meetings have taken place.

Perhaps the most serious question to be discussed was the site of this year's World Development Tea. Where on Salt Spring Island could this event best be held in order to encourage the attendance and the generosity of the greatest number of people?

The most important decision is to choose the stalls. It has been found satisfactory to let the host church take care of serving tea, for its members know how to use their own possessions to the best advantage. They know which chairs to set where and how many cups to borrow.

KNOW WHAT TO DO

If they blow a fuse, they know what to do to get the tea water back on the boil.

That leaves the other three church groups to plan the three stalls. For the 1982 tea, members of the United Church have the responsibility of collecting and selling the plants. The Roman Catholics will make all arrangements for the home baking, and the members of the Community Gospel congregation will care for the attic treasures.

Of course, all the people of all the congregations and all their friends and all the generous men and women on the island will bring cooking and plants and articles to sell on the attic treasures stall. Then they will all come to the tea, make a donation, and buy everything that is for sale on all the stalls!

This event differs from many others. The workers beg everyone to come; they beg people to donate saleable articles; and they beg them to buy. Most of all, they just plain beg for money.

It is not uncommon for cheques of $100, $200 or more to be given. One person (or two or three people) will be prepared to issue receipts that can be used for income tax purposes.

IT ADDS UP

Small donations are gladly accepted as well as large ones. It is amazing how they all add up, small amounts and large amounts, as well as money from each stall.

For the last few years, something in the neighbourhood of $2,000 has been raised each year. That much can provide a great many good wells in places where water has been causing disease, or pay for a great many patient-days in a Third World hospital.

The money that has been raised has traditionally been divided equally among the four sponsoring churches and used by them in the way that they believe will do the most good to the world's desperately poor.

There is a joy that comes from helping those who will never be able to repay you, and who will not even know that it was you who helped them.

Please mark Saturday, Apr. 24 on your calendar!

Letters on El Salvador having positive effect

The 10 Days for World Development Committee at Salt Spring Island drew its 1982 program to a close recently with two evenings of films on El Salvador.

Central American co-ordinator for Amnesty International, Bill Horne of Vancouver, visited the island for one of the showings.

Horne told the meeting that islanders could help by writing to Ottawa to outline their concerns. Those letters which have been sent have been read, he said, and are making a difference.

He noted that there haven't been so many letters written to Ottawa on any one subject since conscription was introduced for World War One.

The committee points out that there can be no talk of democratic elections in a country that saw the last six opposition leaders dragged from public meetings and killed. The platform of the FDR party, whose leader now lives in exile in Mexico, is to create a political democracy, unaligned with any of the great powers.

That, the committee believes, is what the U.S. does not want to see happen.

The group feels that as Canada did not send an official observer to the elections in El Salvador on Sunday, there is hope that Canada will take a stand independent of the U.S.

Pole sheared in accident at Galiano

The driver of the 1974 Plymouth took the curve on Porlier Pass Road on Galiano Island but the car didn't stay on the road.

The Plymouth sheared a telephone pole and it fell across the highway. Driver Rod Wilson bruised his arm while passengers Stuart Georgeson suffered contusions to the mouth and Ivan Sator needed 25 stitches to the head. The telephone pole was reported suffering from fracture.

Investigation of the incident continues.

Trustee impressed with input

Fulford area parents received some warm commendations from school trustee John Zacharias last week.

Reporting on a recent three-hour meeting to discuss the Fulford school, Zacharias reported that he was impressed with the input made by parents. The meeting involved parents, school district officials and architect Dave Brockington, and was called to review the first set of preliminary drawings.

Zacharias advised that the board would have to come up with a policy on some items, one of which was lighting. There had been discussion on full-spectrum lighting which, Zacharias said, was more expensive in terms of maintenance. Full-spectrum tubes, he observed, were 11 times more expensive than fluorescent.

Other topics discussed by the meeting were heating, ventilation, flooring and location of the building on the property.

A second set of drawings will now be prepared, trustees were told.

Down Through the Years with Driftwood

Twenty years ago

An islander donated, anonymously, $500 to the fund-raising campaign for the Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society.

The Guild of Sunshine held a regular monthly meeting in the board room at Mahon Hall. Various committee heads reported on activities and plans for a tea and sale were finalized.

Driftwood classified ad: Will the party who damaged my fence-post and gate Sunday morning after church services come forward and make restitution.

Fulford Hall was getting a new stage and work was progressing favourably. Most of the work was being done by volunteer workers and donations to offset costs were being sought.

Salt Spring Island Recreational Holdings Ltd., owners of the golf course, held a meeting and increased the board of directors to 10 members from five. Plans were announced to replace the sand greens with grass greens. The clubhouse project was also discussed.

The editor of Driftwood had problems explaining the presence of a pair of lady's slacks in his auto. He appealed to the woman to pick them up and when no one claimed the slacks, they were donated to the hospital bargain sale.

Note from a Driftwood ad: All of Salt Spring Island lies farther west than the Victoria post office. So when we say "down east" we could be talking about Victoria.

Fifteen years ago

The Farmers' Co-operative would be closing its doors at the end of May, a meeting of the Salt Spring Island Farmers' Institute was told. The store had seen steadily declining sales as fewer farmers brought their goods in for sale.

H.M.C.S. Columbia was to visit Salt Spring Island and plans were being made to greet the sailors. Residents would be given the opportunity to tour the destroyer escort when it anchored in Ganges Harbour.

The annual spring bazaar was held on Mayne Island by the community association. Hats, aprons, table cloths and other handiwork of Mayne Islanders were for sale along with plants, flowers and home cooked goods.

Residents of North Galiano were adjusting to the bright lights courtesy of the newly finished hydro line to the area. The light house at Porlier Pass was working just fine but the keeper was experiencing difficulty in getting used to the silence. That light had been powered by a generator and the lack of noise did not necessarily mean the light had broken and the keeper had to keep reminding himself of the fact.

The Salt Spring Island Farmers' Institute learned that it was the only such group in the province offering a bounty on cougars.

Ten years ago

Dogs running loose were blamed for killing up to 200 sheep on Salt Spring Island in the first three months of the year. Farmers from all parts of the island reported losses to the roaming dogs.

A warning to persons who attempt to stop dogs attacking sheep came from a Salt Spring farmer. He said the dogs are in a frenzy and could well turn on the person. A Fulford man attempted to stop a dog from running sheep over a cliff. The dog attacked the man, who saved himself only through the use of a cane. Another individual attempted to stop several dogs from harassing sheep and was chased back to his car. He went to a nearby farm for help and the farmer shot the dogs.

Bus connections at Swartz Bay for islanders could not be promised, said officials of the peninsula bus service. Passengers often met friends at Swartz Bay and the bus would be held back for few riders. The schedule would be maintained and islanders could catch the bus if it were there.

A committee of the Salt Spring Chamber of Commerce was attempting to encourage islanders to spend more money at local businesses. The group was also sponsoring a clean-up, paint-up campaign.

Five years ago

Plans proceeded for a reunion of graduates of the Pender Island school. The get-together would take place in August and invitations were going out to all former teachers and pupils.

Opposition to a marina at Scott Point was growing. B.C. Ferries said it would conflict with ferry traffic to and from Long Harbour. Residents cited parking, pollution and noise as objections.

The Community Club of Saturna Island met to elect a new slate of officers. Michael Hayes was chosen as president.

The Gulf Islands School Board was seeking a principal for the Ganges elementary school. The principal of the secondary school had been taking care of both schools but the trustees wanted a separate administrator.

An attempt to launch a Kinsmen Club on Salt Spring fell short of the required number of members for starting up.

Rumours of a pipeline from the mainland to Galiano Island had residents in a flap. The pipeline was for power lines for B.C. Hydro and would not be built for several years. The rumour began when the work of an underwater survey crew became general knowledge. Anglicans from the Vancouver Island Diocese planned a conference on Salt Spring Island. The 90 delegates would be housed in private homes during their stay.

The Capital Regional District was not issuing passes. B.C. Ferries was not issuing passes. Those Gulf Islanders without proper passes identifying them as residents could go to the Ferry Corporation offices and get a letter for proof.

Contract awarded to Nanaimo company

Improvements in the quantity and quality of water for the Highland Water District on Salt Spring Island are in order.

The district asked the Capital Regional Board to approve a tender for the construction of an enlargement to the water treatment building and the installation of new pumping equipment and water filters.

The cost will be $60,606 and the tender goes to the low bidder, Kristie Contracting Company, Ltd. of Nanaimo. Four firms bid on the contract which CRD engineering estimated would cost $51,000.

The Nanaimo firm indicated that the work could start immediately upon approval and the job would be finished within 10 weeks.

The filters will be needed to improve the quality and taste of the water which comes from St. Mary Lake. The filters would be arranged in pairs with one removing suspended solids and the other removing the taste and odour currently associated with the lake water.

Parking lot paved

The parking lot at the Vesuvius ferry terminal was paved last week. Workmen enjoyed the warm sun as they waited for another load of asphalt. The lot should clear the road of vehicles waiting for the Crofton ferry.

Appointments

Two members of the Highland Water District on Salt Spring Island have had their appointments extended. The Capital Regional Board agreed to allow L.W. Kertland of Trincomali Heights and Leona Ross of Maliview Drive to continue to sit on the board until June 30, 1982. The term was to have expired on March 31, 1982.

Sewer action fails in B.C. Court of Appeal

The lawyer for the Capital Regional District claimed that objectors do not have jurisdiction to take the bylaws to court and a judge in the B.C. Court of Appeal agreed.

The court action had been started by Salt Spring residents Andy Orkin, Doreen Ackerman and Yvette Valcourt, CRD director for the island. They were contesting the validity of the CRD's bylaw establishing a specified sewer area in Ganges which passed in 1978.

They were represented by lawyer Robert Price who argued that under sections of the Municipal Act, the CRD needed either the assent of electors or sufficient names on a petition. The CRD had neither, they claimed.

The lawyer for the CRD, Don Farquhar, said the act does not permit an individual to move to set aside a regional bylaw nor does it allow the courts to declare the bylaw invalid.

Mr. Justice William Trainor had to agree with the CRD's lawyer. He said "...I consider the authorities I mentioned binding on me.

"Although counsel for the petitioners argued valiantly that there is a basis on which to distinguish them, I cannot accede and must leave this problem to another forum."

The other forum, the judge said, would be the inspector of municipalities.

He continued, "This conclusion of course relates to the application before me under the Municipal Act and must not be taken to foreclose any other action which may be open to the petitioners."

No seatbelt

Operating a motor vehicle without wearing a seatbelt cost a local man $25 last week.

Ross Vanwinkle was charged on January 21 after he was stopped by RCMP. He appeared in provincial court at Ganges last Wednesday.

To survey outfall

The Capital Regional District will be spending $800 to find out exactly where the outfall pipe is in Ganges Harbour.

The money will be used to pay A.R. Hardie and Associates to undertake a right-of-way survey of the pipe. The survey is a requirement of the lands branch of the provincial ministry of lands, parks and housing.

A legal survey of any outfall must be conducted so that a right-of-way plan for the pipeline can be drawn up.
