Ferry anchors in pass following power loss

Passengers aboard the Queen of Nanaimo had a surprise stop in Active Pass Thursday night when the ferry lost power and had to anchor for eight minutes.

The ferry lost power and was anchored briefly in the busy waterway before resuming its trip to Long Harbour.

The Queen of Nanaimo "had a mechanical failure in the main propulsion unit, where she lost power for several minutes," B.C. Ferries spokesman Betty Nicholson said Monday. The 192-car ferry was returning to Long Harbour on its last trip of the day when the power loss happened at 11:17 pm.

The ship's master ordered the anchor dropped until the fault was corrected eight minutes later. Passengers were alerted of the situation while crew members worked to solve the problem.

A routine check was made of the vessel in Long Harbour, but no explanation was found for the power loss, Nicholson said.

The ferry corporation has a policy of keeping a crew member ready to drop the anchor during docking and while the ferry is in Active Pass to respond to problems like the Thursday night loss of power.

'Hoodlums' spark concern as hotel guests demand refund

Ganges RCMP will be asked to discuss local policing concerns at a future meeting of the Salt Spring Island Chamber of Commerce.

Last week's chamber meeting voted to invite police to a meeting after director Andy Dietrich cited several infractions witnessed in downtown Ganges over the summer.

Dietrich later told Driftwood that he and others are concerned about intoxicated minors seen on downtown streets, vehicles being handled in an unsafe manner and disruptions at Centennial Park.

"We've got to stop the hoodlums," Dietrich said. "But where are the police? There seems to be no policing."

As an example of the incidents he is concerned about, Dietrich noted that several guests at Rita's Inn complained about being awakened one morning at about 3 am by youths racing their cars. The vehicles, lined up in the Village Market parking lot, were being driven at high speed up the ramped exit that leads to Lower Ganges Road, with no regard for the stop sign there.

"The cars were airborne," Dietrich said, adding that Rita's Inn had to refund payments for rooms to the guests who complained.

It was not the first time the inn made refunds in response to noise complaints, says operator Rita Dodds. "I've had to do it three or four times — one night, everyone in the front five rooms complained and got a refund. Another time, two women left at 7 pm because of the noise."

How many per pound? 121, to be precise

And the winner is...

A Driftwood reader posed the question in August of how many hummingbirds make up a pound. Using scientific data from his own research, Galiano Island resident Earl Young calculated the number of hummingbirds in a pound and suggested a contest to guess the correct number.

Vancouverite Diana Ritchie won the contest with her guess of 113.5 hummingbirds per pound.

Ritchie, a Driftwood subscriber, gave no explanation of the formula she used to arrive at the almost-correct guess.

Keeping to our promise, we will be sending the contest winner a hummingbird feeder.

And how many hummingbirds are there in a pound? Young used a gunpowder scale to determine that 121 of the tiny birds would

Drawings prepared

Projects cloud traffic changes

An architectural drawing showing all the redevelopment projects slated for Ganges will be used to spark discussion of changes to local road and traffic systems.

The drawing is being prepared voluntarily by Jane Durante, a summer Salt Spring resident who operates a landscape architecture firm in Vancouver. A "rough draft" of the plan was to have been finished late last week.

Durante said the work grew out of a realization by herself and local architects Jonathan Yardley and Bob Hassell that they were drafting plans for "bits and pieces (of development) all over the place," and that answering the question of traffic system changes might be helped by one drawing showing how the combination of those projects will alter the downtown core.

Redevelopment is the key, say Yardley and local highways ministry roads foreman John Stepaniuk. Changes to downtown traffic patterns are currently "up in the air," and subject to discussion, Stepaniuk says, because the picture of traffic route changes has been clouded by redevelopment already underway and projects about to begin.

"There's too much going on between Mahon Hall and Ganges Hill, too many changes planned" to make discussion of road network changes a simple matter, Yardley agreed.

Among the projects that must be taken into account are Centennial Park improvements, the Gasoline Alley expansion, closing off of the vehicle route between the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and the Bank of Montreal, widening of the road between Mouat's Mall and the General Store building, and the Grace Point development.

The effect of those projects and of the vehicle network changes already made — the extension of McPhillips Avenue and adjustments to the intersection of Lower Ganges Road and Fulford-Ganges Road, for instance — must be coupled with flow studies done over the summer and the findings of an Islands Trust parking survey before some sense of road requirements can emerge and be fitted to the future form of Ganges.

Even then, a process of dissection and discussion will be necessary before the scope of any vehicle network requirements can be determined, Durante indicated.

"The plan I'm doing has a lot of ideas but it's still in the jelling stage," she said. "A lot of homework has to be done, and a lot of discussion has to take place, before anything is ironed out."

And a finalized plan will only be the start of a process to decide what road changes will be acceptable or even feasible, Durante indicated.

"When it's done, pieces of this plan will be going everywhere for comment — to John Stepaniuk, to Tom Toynbee (at Moutat's), to the parks and recreation commission, to Jonathan Yardley, to the Chamber of Commerce ..."

She added: "I don't know what's going to come out of all this, where it's going to lead, but I'd like to think it will be the basis for — and I hate to use this term — an urban design."

Durante cautioned that the plan is still in the preliminary stage and that any discussion of its form is premature. However, she said its thrust will be "something reasonable and functional" that will "retain the village character of Ganges."

The main point, she continued, will be organizing road and parking systems while taking pedestrian needs into account. For instance, Durante is drawing in what she calls "logical crosswalk points" but isn't sure how those will be accepted.

Concerns over crosswalks are not new. Since the spring paving work was done, Stepaniuk has received plenty of suggestions for crosswalk improvements, and some complaints about the present system. He has since forwarded proposals for changes to higher-ups in the ministry but suggested that community input and involvement is still necessary.

However, Durante and Yardley noted that there may be a large difference between proposals arising from the plan and subsequent discussions, and what it will be practical to do.

"The problem," Yardley said, "is that we are not incorporated. We have no money to do anything. We are dependent on the highways department for anything that will happen."

As an example, he noted that a bypass or secondary route to downtown Ganges could clarify traffic patterns but if "the economics are not there," the highways ministry cannot be expected to proceed with such a project.

Durante added: "How you implement any of these changes is another question entirely. There is the local highways ministry budget to take into account, and it may be up to some shopkeepers to do some of the work."

In any event, the question of paying for work will be put off until discussions determine the scope of changes to be made. And Andy Dietrich, a Chamber of Commerce director involved with that organization's traffic committee, says it is up to residents to participate fully in those discussions.

"The highways ministry has done everything it could," he said. "Now, we have to wait to see how all the pieces will fit together, and provide some input."

Dietrich said fuller discussions could have taken place earlier but local merchants have been too concerned with holidays, the tourist season and their businesses to concentrate on traffic questions. Also, the effect of changes already made had to be monitored.

"But now, maybe we can get back to it," he said. "In the absence of local government, it's up to us to pick up the slack and offer some direction for the improvements we need."

make a pound if they all weighed the same as one that crashed into his window earlier this year.

After coming up with his estimate, Young asked his friends for guesses. Their wildly varying responses led him to share the quiz with other Gulf Islanders.

Young's tongue-in-cheek scientific study employed his gunpowder scale, which measures weights accurate to 1/7,000 of a pound. He admits, however, that the bird lost "a half-dozen feathers" when it hit his window, throwing off the accuracy of his estimate.

Ritchie's guess was within seven and a half hummingbirds of the "correct" number. She narrowly beat out G. Friedmann of Galiano Island, who based a guess of 130 birds on the weight of a similar unfortunate hummingbird which flew into a window.

Two interesting entries in the contest offered even more scientific methods.

Salt Spring Island residents Lynda Gordon and David and Sarah Skinner narrowed their area of study to the three or four hummingbird species which frequent the Gulf Islands (archilochus alexandri, selasphorus rufus and selasphorus sasin) to arrive at their guesses of between 174 and 183 hmgbd./lb.

Saturna Island resident Gail Trafford based her estimate on the nursery rhyme about four and 20 blackbirds making up a pie. Estimating the relative size of hummingbirds and the weight of pie filling, she decided there must be 72 hummingbirds in a pound.

Our thanks to all the readers who took the time to research this weighty question and submit their guesses. Now, does anyone know how many angels could sit on the head of a pin?

Wheelhouse renovation

Future of Cy Peck to be decided at meeting

The future of the Cy Peck wheelhouse will be decided at a meeting to be held on Salt Spring later this month.

Andy Dietrich, the Chamber of Commerce director taking charge of the restoration project, said he hopes the meeting will draw a good number of island residents willing to share their ideas.

The wheelhouse was donated to Salt Spring earlier this year after the Cy Peck was scuttled in Nanaimo Harbour, ending any hope of restoring the historic vessel. In its prime, the ship was a vehicle and passenger ferry serving Salt Spring and other nearby Gulf Islands.

Dietrich said the meeting will consider possible locations for the wheelhouse, the display form it should take and the budget that will be needed for restoration work.

He's looking for as much input as possible. Dietrich said he hopes all islanders will express interest in the project, and that former Cy Peck crew members living on Salt Spring, and members of the local historical society, will play a particularly active role in discussions.

"I'd like to get a committee to look at what will be needed to restore and place the wheelhouse," Dietrich continued, explaining that estimates and finances will be a prime concern.

"I don't think it will cost that much but, at the moment, there's no money available (from the chamber), so we'll have to investigate funding," he said. One possible source of money to be investigated is the provincial government's Lottery Fund.

The wheelhouse has spent much of the summer drying out in a garage on the island and is considered to be in generally good shape. The form of display chosen, then, could be the most costly aspect of the project.

Dietrich indicated he would prefer a set-up — probably in Ganges — that would close off the interior of the wheelhouse to protect it from possible vandalism. Nothing is set in stone, however.

"I'm willing to discuss any ideas, with anyone, at any time," he said. "It's time to put our thoughts together."

A time and place for the meeting have yet to be arranged, although Dietrich said he hopes it can be held around the third week of September.

STILL PAYING TAX ON INVESTMENT INCOME?
WOULD YOU LIKE INCOME AND CAPITAL THAT GROWS?

For many years Canadian investors have enjoyed a steady monthly income on a tax preferred basis through the professional and proven management of John Templeton and his Templeton Growth Fund Ltd.

FOR EXAMPLE:
 A person who had $100,000 in Templeton Growth Fund on January 1, 1964 and started a 1% per month withdrawal of $1,000 (12% per year) would have received $264,000 in monthly payments by December 31, 1985.

However, instead of having just the original $100,000 left, the value remaining in the fund at December 31, 1985 was $1,181,753. Furthermore, that $264,000 "income" would bear FAR less tax liability than an equivalent income earned from interest or annuities.

With that $1,181,753 which is left you could withdraw 1% per month ($11,810 monthly or $118,175 annually) to keep pace with inflation.

SOUND TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE?
 Well, it is good. And there are over 500,000 Templeton investors who know that it is indeed true.

Discipline

My past caught up with me again at the weekend. When I married off my younger daughter an old air force buddy offered a warm tribute to the bride. He was George Jessup, retired provincial assessor and once an instrument basher in the Royal Air Force. During the time we were both stationed at Patricia Bay's 32 OTU, we worked in the same section. Like me, he was not enamoured of keen discipline.

George's toughest moment in life was leaving his warm bed in the early hours of the morning. As a junior NCO it fell to my lot to make sure he did get up.

Last weekend he reminded me of the nearest we reached to an impasse. I had growled, shouted, screamed and resorted to various expressions known only to serving men in the armed forces in an effort to encourage him to crawl out into the cold light of day.

Finally, he gripped the blankets with tight fists as he manfully fought to keep covered and he uttered his dire warnings: "If you don't leave me alone, I won't get up at all!"

He got up and he survived later, and grimmer, ordeals to come back to the west coast after the fighting was over.

Pumping water

Summer is the time of year when you spend all your spare dollars pumping water from deep in the ground in order to spray it back on the ground. And you just hope that after all this artificial attention, the pesky blooms will flourish.

Trouble is that when you're short of water and short of dollars it makes the flowers expensive.

I went to the Saanich Fair and I chatted with the politicians there. And when I got back I wrote of having met various spokesmen for various political parties. But it didn't get into the paper quite that way.

At the New Democratic Party's pavilion I met Carol Pickup whom I have known for a long time. We had a talk for a time and I wrote of my encounter. It didn't get into the column.

The paragraph on Carol was left out and the only references were to Ken Arnott and to David Vickers, whom I didn't meet.

Carol is one of the two New Democratic candidates already named for the two-seat Saanich constituency in the next provincial election. Veteran of earlier NDP campaigns and of school affairs, Carol will run alongside David Vickers, who was at one time deputy attorney-general.

The Social Credit candidates have not yet been named for the seats. Although there is only one Saanich seat at the present time, and that held by Hugh Curtis, provincial secretary, the picture will change for the next election campaign and the two seats will be open.

The two candidates were named by their fellow New Democrats last November.

Festival deficit may hit $5,000

Projections which saw Salt Spring Island's recent jazz festival finish in a break-even situation have been squashed as the bills continue to come in.

Chamber of Commerce president Tony Richards blames the shortfall — already set at $2,700 — on poor attendance. Anticipating a large turnout, the Jazz Society printed 1,000 tickets, 350 of which were actually sold. Richards says the total debt could reach $5,000.

Personal guarantees will have to be signed in order to establish a line of credit from the bank, Richards says. "A number of people will have to take responsibility...until we stage some sort of fund-raising event."

Richards doubts the chamber will be willing to put out money for the event again next. He personally recommends it be dropped because "the interest isn't here on the island." While he says it would be nice to draw tourists to the island with the festival, there has to be enough local support to carry it.

Traffic patterns need dose of public comment

The complexities influencing a feel for future traffic patterns in and around Ganges, outlined in an article in today's Driftwood, demand a large dose of public comment and suggestions. The sooner, the better.

Downtown traffic systems and parking allowances have been in a state of flux since paving work earlier this year brought changes to highways ministry have been striving to introduce modifications that meet the variety of interests present, but only so much has been possible.

The prime stumbling block has been the substantial redevelopment of Ganges. Both the projects now underway and the work planned for the near future have made it difficult to contemplate what the core will look like a year from now, much less to imagine the form of traffic and parking systems that will best meet the needs of a mobile public.

A draft plan being prepared by Vancouver landscape architect Jane Durante—with input from local architects Jonathan Yardley and Bob Hassell, and highways department roads foreman John Stepaniuk—should clear the air of uncertainty. It will show all the proposed redevelopment in Ganges and outline vehicle and pedestrian traffic systems tailored to suit aesthetic and practical concerns.

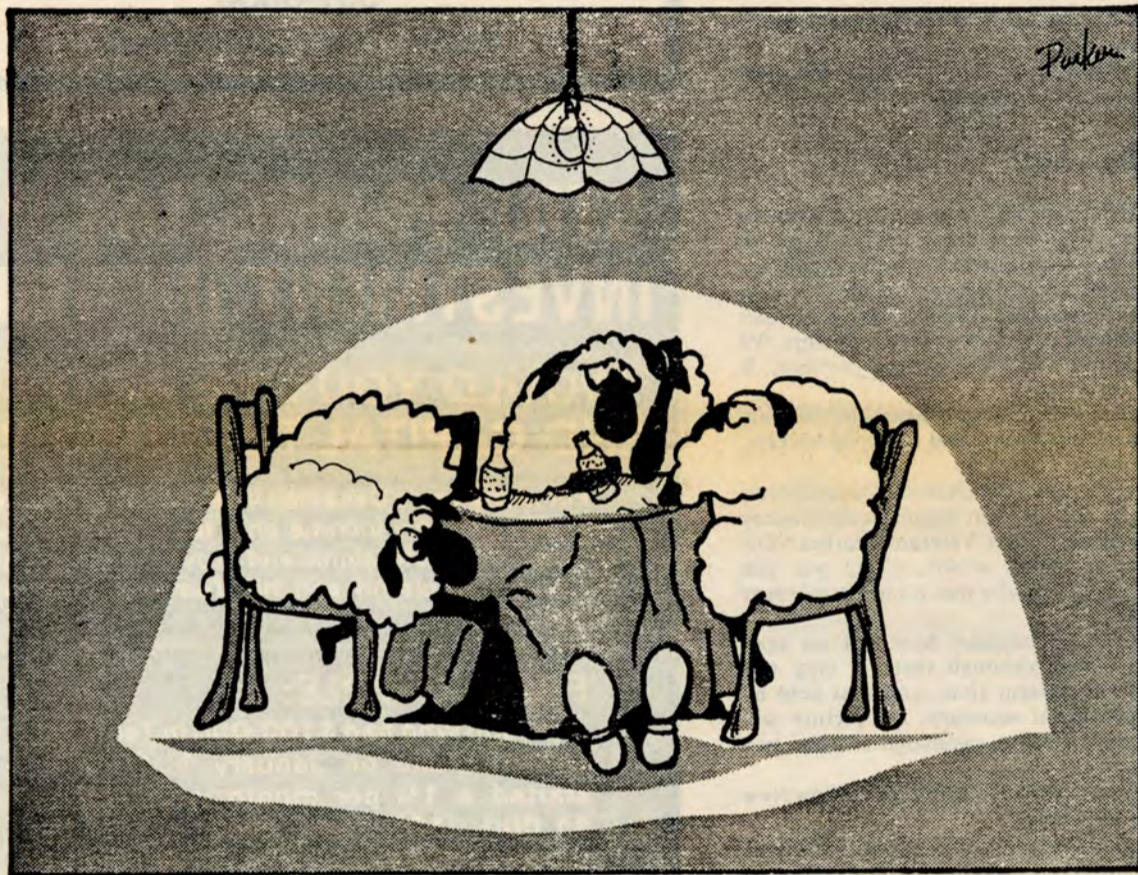

The conceptual plan can only do so much, however. Its role is as much the laying of a foundation for discussion as it is the forming of an architectural framework. And the value of those discussions cannot be over-emphasized.

While the redevelopment scenario will be concrete, the road and parking systems it envisions will be subject to the practical and political considerations that can scotch even the best ideas. Community participation and leadership—be it from downtown landowners, the Chamber of Commerce or private citizens—is essential from this point on if the best possible system is to emerge.

Once the architectural plan is finalized, a series of meetings to consider the alternatives should be the prime objective, leading to a swift consensus of opinion about the proper route to follow. Time, after all, is running out: redevelopment will be here before we know it.

Since the call went out for local participation in their decision-making process, the highways ministry in general and John Stepaniuk in particular have shown a willingness to listen to our concerns and suggestions. They have also shown themselves to be patient in waiting for the island process to unwind itself.

Now it's time to answer the highways ministry—by deciding, as quickly as possible, what we want. From there, the considerations of time, money and practicality should allow a proper traffic system to fall into place.

Changing licence plates requires telegram to Ottawa

By ANDREW GIBSON

The other day I phoned a lady of my acquaintance. I wanted to ask her how one of her projects was coming, and since she is eminently patient, restrained and courteous I expected a soothing conversation. Instead, and to my surprise, there was an unfamiliar edge to her voice. Nothing extreme or obvious to a stranger, but as soon as she said hello, I just knew that this wasn't her day.

But, pressing on, I asked my question. She answered. Then, rather hesitantly, I enquired if anything was amiss.

"Why do you ask?" she countered with a belligerence which I had never before detected. "Well ... er ...," I stammered, "maybe I'm psychic, but I just thought ..."

"Yes?"
"I thought you sounded a bit ... out of sorts."

There was a sigh.

"If you must know, I've been changing my licence plates."

At first I was mystified. Surely so prosaic a chore wouldn't upset so serene a lady. But then a dim memory came flooding back to me of skinned knuckles.

"You mean ...?" I faltered.

"Yes. I get my new plates today, and I've been trying to get the old ones off."

It all came back to me—the gravel driveways, the hammers, the pipe wrenches, the slamming of the front door to shield the children against the language.

"Yes, yes," I soothed.

"You'd think," she hissed with deceptive softness, "that a civilization that could get spacecraft to the moon could fix it so that us earthlings could change the bleep bleep licence plates on our Datsuns."

She didn't say anything untoward. Her actual words were bleep bleep.

I tsk-tsked sympathetically. She became somewhat calmer.

"I tried everything. I ruined the screwdriver. Then I got the wrench. Can you believe it, the bleep bleep nut was ROUND."

She paused to gather her strength. "Now I ask you ... what kind of an idiot would do that? Like, who are we dealing with?"

guest column

"The Marquis de Sade?" I suggested.

"That's the guy! Now I'm not going to complain about the gravel I imbedded in my bod by lying on the driveway and hauling on the wrench ..."

I gasped. I could almost feel the sharp edges.

"... but when the wrench slipped and I chipped my tooth ..."

"Ohhhh!"

"I nearly gave up. But you know what the law says about expired plates. They must be removed. Ha! I'd like to see some of those guys ..."

Her voice trailed off. I think I detected the word bleep again.

"It was only when it slipped again and I hit my glasses ... I mean, I'd hate to have to learn Braille because of some nuts."

She didn't say what nuts meant. I didn't ask.

Her voice rose again. "You know, we get all this hype about the wonders of modern technology."

"We do," I agreed.

"They're always pounding our ears about how the Canadarm can thread a needle in space, or do some other dumb trick ..."

"They are."

"But they get the village idiots to design the stuff back here on earth. Did you ever try to assemble an E-Z Fitt set of shelves?"

I had.

"Even worse, did you ever try to put together a MINIT-BILD garden shed?"

I had the warped knuckles to prove it.

"And," she continued relentlessly, "how about licence plates?"

"That too. I had to buy a blow torch."

"Then," she concluded, "will you send a telegram to Ottawa, telling them to cool it in space until they handle the headaches down here?"

I promised.
"I knew I could count on you. Say, do you know Mulroney's number?"

I didn't. She murmured something about Directory Assistance, and hung up. I hope she got him. I'm with her all the way.

Duncan MacDonnell is on sick leave.

Goal needed

Sir,
Perhaps the controversy over the Farmers' Market is prompted by its own success. Could the problem not be the personalities involved but the lack of area available for Saturday displays? Perhaps what is needed is a clearly-defined long-term goal for the community to work towards in order to preserve and enhance this popular asset.

Some time ago it was the dream of many in Ganges to have a breakwater built for the harbour. Crowding at the present government dock and many anchored boats demonstrate that this need still exists. Could not this breakwater be in the form of a wide, well-designed pier? Perhaps it could be located alongside the Coast Guard shack at the end of Fulford-Ganges Road.

Such a pier would become famous with its farmers' market on deck. It would be a further extension of the Trust dream of a water walkway. It would focus the community towards its marine environment. A pier would provide services for boats and provide water-related activities for the public (windsurfing, tour boats, passenger ferry service, float plane tie ups, fishing charters, Coast Guard station and tour charters).

Properly designed, it could further enhance the unique character of Ganges. Possibly a design committee could hold a contest to see if such a project would add or detract from the seascape.

Would not agricultural grants, lottery funding and federal and provincial money be available to further such a project? Would the community want such a visionary project? Would it retain parkland in Ganges and reduce crowding at the launching facility? Would it allow for greater parking in the core area? Would such a 10-year goal mobilize constructive forces? Could it be designed to add character and beauty to the harbour or would it detract from the marine view? Unique piers have worked in other waterfront communities. Could it work here?
ALLEN S. CUNNINGHAM,
Ganges.

Print bylaw

Sir,
The CRD director in his report seems unable to let well alone. If the Driftwood used the space allocated to all the recent petty verbiage to print the parks bylaw it would have fulfilled an obligation to the community in a much more responsible manner.

Why, Mr. Editor, has the Driftwood not done so? I await your reply with interest.

Deserve explanation

Sir,
Salt Spring visitors and residents deserve some explanation for the content of the park bylaw 1453. None has been provided, despite several articles and letters written by Driftwood staff and by the local CRD director. Instead these seek to defend the new law without detailing what it in fact says.

Section four reads: "No vending shall take place in any park without the commission's written approval." There are a number of reasons why this section is offensive.

First, it runs against the spirit of a referendum question posed some time ago in which a majority of voters supported the continuance of vending.

Second, it makes no distinction between occasional mid-week farmers, fishermen and crafts people on the one hand, and regular commercial vendors on the other.

Third, it misses what would have been a great opportunity to acknowledge that the Centennial Parking lot is not "parkland" in the usual sense, and that as such it could reasonably be preserved as a contained enclave for mid-week vending.

Finally, it provides the real rationale for bylaw 1453 as a whole; not the proper construction, equipping, operation and maintenance of recreational facilities and programs (which are the recreation commission's stated legislative mandate) but the attempted regulation of trade and commerce in an area of Ganges where specific sorts of vending have been enjoyed by all of us for a long time.

Section three provides for the continuance of the Saturday market but does not enshrine it. It says the market "may" (not "shall") continue and limits it from the present unrestricted length to seven hours.

In section five the recreation commission may impose any terms and conditions for vendors including (but not limited to) charging for space.

The combined effect of these provisions is to put in place the means to the end of the Saturday market as we know it. The commission could, for instance, limit the sorts of things to be sold, could require vendors to pay an unaffordable sum or could require special display stalls. We could end up with the sort of artisan booths we see at B.C. Ferry terminals.

The sad thing about all this is that people who use the Saturday market enjoy it precisely because it is not uniform and because it is unregulated. If the recreation commission and the public value the Saturday market, sections three and five should be radically changed.

Section seven forbids the use of barbeques or camp stoves but only "for the preparation of food or drink." If danger of fire is the motive for this section, it should obviously be rewritten. But it is clear this is another provision for regulating vending. As it presently stands, I could legally set Central Park ablaze through the careless use of my hibachi (so long as no food is on the grill) but my cup of coffee from the Saturday market will have been illegally brewed.

Section nine forbidding playing "at any game whatsoever in or on any portion of any park except upon or in such portions thereof as may be especially allotted ..." has not been seriously justified by anyone on behalf of the CRD. It epitomizes the spirit of this needlessly restrictive bylaw. If the regional district wants to limit specific games, or protect certain park areas, why not provide specific and positive legislation for those specific purposes? It would be so simple.

Sections 15 and 18 are most offensive to some. The first forbids the distribution of handbills without the recreation commission's approval in writing. The second forbids us all from setting foot on a Salt Spring park between 11 pm and 6 am.

Do we really need this sort of legislation? The CRD has argued we do, because they have no teeth without it, it exists in other places and "the happiest families are the ones with rules that protect the rights of each member of the family." But the present debate has more than addressed each of these. If you agree that this law is needless, please write the commission or the CRD a letter more brief than this one. They will be interested in what you have to say. Oh, and remember, always be polite.

Ineffectual body

Sir,
In July of this year, I was privileged to attend a two-week series of workshops in human rights at the University of Ottawa. My attendance was made possible by a scholarship awarded in recognition of my research in the areas of rights of the disabled and vocational rehabilitation.

I might point out that in July, 1983, the Socred government in B.C. fired all the human rights officers in the province without notice. For the next 14 months there was no Human Rights Commission, no human rights officers and no human rights director.

The destruction of human rights in B.C. was condemned by groups and individuals across Canada, including federal cabinet ministers, who wrote to Premier Bennett pointing out that B.C. had put Canada in jeopardy of violating its international human rights covenants.

The Socreds have since established the B.C. Human Rights Council, a totally ineffectual body serving the interests of the government which created it. British Columbia will continue to serve as a bad example until the return of democratic government and the re-establishment of a duly-accredited Human Rights Commission.
BILL BEST,
Ganges.

Disgust

Sir,
I certainly agree with Harry Harris's disgust regarding the Hiroshima and Nagasaki ad in your August 6 edition.

Let's place the dropping of these two bombs in historical perspective. On July 26, 1945, the Potsdam Declaration, signed by the U.S., U.K. and the U.S.S.R., offered Japan an ultimatum — unconditional surrender or complete destruction (no mention of the atomic bomb). The Japanese, in their infinite wisdom (?) declined to answer.

On August 6, 1945, the Enola Gay dropped the bomb on Hiroshima and on August 9, 1945, the second bomb was dropped on Nagasaki. On August 10, 1945, the Japanese accepted the Potsdam ultimatum.

To state that the decision to drop these bombs didn't hasten an end to the war, and consequently save lives — both Allied and Japanese — is, to paraphrase a very tired cliché 'a crime against intelligence.'

Analyze the two targets: both were principally agricultural centres, there was a naval base close to Nagasaki and Hiroshima's main claim to fame was the production of sake, not what you would call prime targets. I suggest Mr. Truman, in settling on these targets, was intimating that if you don't want to see Tokyo, Kobe and Nagoya obliterated you had better accept our terms. They did.

In summary, although the purposes for dropping the bomb may have encompassed those outlined in the August 6 ad, if by dropping the bombs the war was shortened by one day, one week, one month or one year and/or if the decision made by Mr. Truman saved one Allied soldier's life, he made the right decision.

Excellent series

Sir,
I would like to commend you for publishing the excellent series of articles by Anne Williams regarding the Islands Trust. The British Columbia Gulf Islands do indeed offer a unique setting.

More than a decade ago, by way of acknowledging that fact, a previous New Democratic government sought to protect the Islands from exploitation and unco-ordinated development through the establishment of the Islands Trust.

Since then, the Islands Trust has proved its worth. Elected by island residents, its members have served to foster the spirit of community which has become increasingly important to everyone living on the Gulf Islands.

It was only a few short years ago, however, that our new premier attempted to destroy the Islands Trust. As minister of municipal affairs, Mr. Vander Zalm introduced a new Land Use Act in which a key provision called for the elimination of the Islands Trust. This proposal and the particular provision respecting the Trust was vigorously opposed by island residents and other equally far-sighted individuals province wide. The result was that the government of the day was forced to back down, but not before Mr. Vander Zalm referred to his cabinet colleagues as "gutless."

The first version of the Land Use Act was tabled in December, 1981. On April 15, 1982, Mr. John Rich, then chairman of the Islands Trust, wrote to the minister of municipal affairs citing four specific occasions when Vander Zalm had assured the Trustees that there would be no change in the planning responsibilities of the Trust.

Then, on July 23, 1982, Vander Zalm dropped his bombshell. Late in the long session, he tabled Bill 72, the new Land Use Act in which section 190 said simply "The Islands Trust Act is repealed."

Island residents learned something about dealing with Mr. Vander Zalm on that occasion. What he does is far more important than what he says. Smiles are not enough to ensure the future of the Islands Trust.

Support needed

Sir,
On May 9, 1885, a Red Cross flag was raised for the first time on Canadian soil.

In order to keep the Red Cross flag flying high in communities throughout B.C. and the Yukon, over $250,000 must be raised in this year's provincial fund-raising campaign.

A mail campaign was done on the Island in June. If you live north of Kitchen Road and have not made a donation but wanted to, the tellers at the Bank of Commerce will take it and give you a receipt.

If you live in Fulford, a canvasser will be knocking on your door sometime during the month of September. If we miss you, please use the mailing envelope we leave or visit Ruth at the post office — she will take your donation and give you a receipt.

We can assure you that 93 cents of every dollar you donate goes directly into programs for people. The costs of operating Red Cross programs are kept to an absolute minimum because so many people, like myself and all the door-to-door canvassers are strictly volunteers. We are not paid a wage or reimbursed for any expenses.

Most people identify the Red Cross as the sole supplier of blood to all Canadian hospitals. In B.C. alone, the Red Cross collected 140,000 pints of blood last year. But, did you know that it costs about $1 per pint of blood to process it and make it usable in the hospitals?

The Red Cross also gives aid to refugees and victims of natural and man-made disasters — Africa, Columbia, Mexico, Barrie, Ontario, etc.

Donations do not have to be large to make a difference. If you think you cannot afford to give even one dollar, think what would happen if everyone felt the same way. Try to imagine a world without Red Cross.

We recognize that these are difficult times. Your thoughtfulness and generosity is much appreciated.

Election hint in Sunday pub openings

VICTORIA — It was the beer caper that cinched it, as far as I'm concerned.

When the premier of British Columbia says he wants to bring down the price of a glass of beer so the working man can afford the stuff again, I know an election is in the wind.

The first hint of an impending election came when Premier Vander Zalm told a meeting of British Columbia broadcasters that pubs would probably stay open on Sundays after Expo closes.

But when he promised to tilt at the windmills of high beer prices ... well, I just knew this was it. A fall election was certain, and what a platform — lower beer prices.

But there are actually better reasons to suspect that Vander Zalm won't shelve the election until next spring. His popularity is greater than anyone would have expected. Fears that he might suffer the same fate as John Turner, who rushed into an election in the wake of Liberal leadership convention euphoria, seem to be unfounded.

'A fall election was certain; and what a platform—lower beer prices.'

The public clearly wants to like Vander Zalm. Whatever it takes to be popular, he's got it. I mean, people stop him on the street to ask what they should do about garden pests.

The inescapable conclusion is that he can't possibly do better next spring, so why wait?

By now, all constituencies should have had a call from David Poole, executive director of the Social Credit Party, instructing them to get on with their nominating meetings — another sign that Vander Zalm is gearing up for a fall election.

The second or third week of October look like good bets, depending on whether he calls the election right after he comes back from the Socred caucus retreat in Prince George or a week later.

As for some admittedly premature speculation on the possible outcome of an election, it doesn't look too good for the NDP.

A friend of mine who is running for the Socred candidacy in one of the 69 ridings (I also have NDP

capital comment

by

friends) is convinced that the New Democrats will be lucky to get 20 seats.

At this point, I fear he's right. I say fear because I am extremely leery of governments with large majorities. They tend to be arrogant and autocratic.

But I can't see how the NDP's Bob Skelly is going to hold off the Vander Zalm steamroller. He all but admitted himself that he can't win an election against Vander Zalm. At least, he said he couldn't compete with the man's charisma and charm. That's not the kind of thing a confident party leader is supposed to say, even if it's true.

Nor are Vander Zalm's charisma and charm the only things that spell trouble for the NDP. Of far greater consequence is the fact that, in the few weeks he's been premier, Vander Zalm has been steering the Socreds away from the extreme right to the centre of the political spectrum, where undecided voters are more likely to be found.

The Socreds' swing to the centre has been so pronounced that Iona Campagnolo, president of the Liberal Party of Canada, called Vander Zalm a Liberal premier.

As long as the Socreds looked like born-again right wingers, the NDP had a good chance of winning the next election. That chance, I'm afraid, is now gone.

The NDP will, of course, do everything it can to convince voters that a mere change in leaders hasn't altered the basic position of the Social Credit party.

It's a tactic that has worked well for the Socreds. When the NDP abandoned some of its more socialistic goals, the Socreds successfully used the old saw of the leopard that is unable to change its spots. Dave Barrett was still wearing his same old red underwear, they said.

But in the case of Vander Zalm, I don't think it will work. The public seems to be very comfortable in its belief that the man isn't another Bill Bennett.

All of which is bad for the NDP. Not only will they have little chance of winning the election, but they may be routed by the smiling man who once quit politics in disgust and then came back to claim the job of premier.

Joint committee considered

You will recall that as a result of the ministry of lands, parks and housing asking me for input from the CRD on the lifting of the electric-motor-only (EMO) ban on St. Mary Lake, a public meeting was held on July 3. A request was made by those present that the two representatives of the Islands Trust and myself should meet with the ministry to seek assistance in having the EMO status returned. Along with Mr. Don Storr, chairman of the North Salt Spring Water Board, we met late in July with Austin Pelton to explain the problem. In addition, the board of the Capital Region wrote to the ministry adding its voice to our request.

The CRD has received a reply from Mr. Pelton to that request, as follows:

I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter to the Honourable Jack J. Kemp dated July 29, 1986, in reference to the Supreme Court decision respecting the regulation of boating on St. Mary Lake.

I have requested my staff to review the court decision and the possibility of addressing your concerns through provincial legislation and anticipate being able to advise you of my review within two months.

At the meeting with Mr. Pelton we also asked if he could provide us with information as to how some lakes in B.C. were able to get gasoline-powered outboards removed. Since Mr. Pelton hasn't replied to this request, I have written to remind him that we would much appreciate the in-

director's report

by

formation, even though it would appear to be based on federal legislation.

If we haven't heard from Mr. Pelton directly, or through the CRD, by early November, we will contact him again.

Ganges Traffic

This is a preliminary report on a matter that many of you have been concerned about. A meeting was held on Friday last with John Stepaniuk, roads foreman for the highways department on Salt Spring Island.

Suggestions were made regarding placement of crosswalks in the village. The consensus at that meeting will be studied further by a local group that had met with Highways previously, and Mr. Stepaniuk will approach the highways department.

In addition, tentative plans were shown for what was described as the "greening" of Ganges. Trees are planned for the large traffic island, the walkway from Manson Road, and of course trees in the Centennial Park parking area. The village "asphalt jungle" will hopefully soon disappear.

Ganges problems

As noted many times, the Regional District concept leaves many holes in the organization of an electoral area. The affairs in Ganges Village is an example. The Islands Trust has some jurisdiction, and the Chamber of Commerce and the Ganges Centre Association have legitimate interests. Various other groups have concerns, but there is no one group that is broad-based enough to provide some consensus of what is desired or needed. The residents should have some say (at one time there was a residents' association), and those who use Ganges as a commercial centre, but who live elsewhere, also should have a voice.

Incorporation of Ganges Village or the new halfway house being proposed by the department of municipal affairs may be feasible or desirable, but even if acceptable, neither of these would be in place in time to solve some of the growing problems associated with recent developments in Ganges. Perhaps the Islands Trust could convene a meeting which could perhaps consider forming an unofficial village council with fairly wide representation. This group could, at the very least, assure that differing points of view and interests were at least considered.

As far as I can see, the problem of organizing has been that no one group has clear jurisdiction and hence the hesitancy of any one group to initiate action.

Peace Day to be marked

On Tuesday, Sept. 16 people in over 50 countries around the world are expected to share a moment of silence, contemplating world peace.

The day has been designated The International Day of Peace and 1986 deemed The International Year of Peace.

Following the minute of silence, in which island schools will be participating, church bells will sound for a further minute.

Sunday named Terry Fox Day

In recognition of the commitment and contribution made by Terry Fox towards the goal of finding a cure for cancer, the Capital Regional District (CRD) has declared September 14 as Terry Fox Day.

The move is in keeping with the national date set for the sixth annual Terry Fox Run.

In a prepared statement from CRD chairman Howard Sturrock, the CRD indicated its wish to "honour the memory of this fine young Canadian," who staged his Marathon of Hope six years ago.

The CRD also invites all citizens to participate in the Terry Fox Run, being held at the University of Victoria's Centennial Stadium on the same day.

Co-operation can aid police

Co-operation by the public will help Ganges police respond to concerns about "hoodlums" at large in the downtown core.

Ganges RCMP Sgt. Mitch Hanks, responding to queries about police enforcement raised at a Chamber of Commerce meeting (see story below), told Driftwood that "the best way to enforce anything is to have reporting and recording of information by the public."

If local residents see the incidents of reckless driving, tire-spinning and general noisy behaviour the Chamber is complaining about, they can help the police by recording licence plate numbers and other pertinent details, Sgt. Hanks added.

"If we have that information, we can lay charges," he said.

Sgt. Hanks pointed out that, for all the talk of "hoodlums" operating in the downtown core, incidents there prompted but 10 complaints through the months of July and August. As a result of those complaints, his staff issued charges, under the Motor Vehicle Act, for loud and unnecessary noise (one charge), speeding (two), driving without a licence (one), and failing to stop at a stop sign (one); and issued one traffic warning.

In addition, local police made 14 seizures of liquor in the downtown area over those two months.

"The enforcement was there," Sgt. Hanks said.

However, he pointed out that the 10 complaints about activities in downtown Ganges were a small percentage of the 503 files police opened over the two-month period.

"We had 10 complaints from the public about erratic driving, et cetera, in the downtown area," he said. "It's a small percentage — the other cases were things like thefts, domestic disputes, impaired driving, vandalism and noisy music impaired driving, vandalism and noisy music."

Sgt. Hanks' point is that island residents should help local enforcement by noting information, when possible, and by registering complaints immediately. "A lot of complaints come in the next day, when it doesn't do us much good," he said. "If we get a call the next day about someone spinning their tires, there isn't much we can do."

One factor complicating local enforcement is the handling of complaint calls by the Nanaimo RCMP detachment after a certain hour of night. By the time those calls are relayed to local police officers, the people making noise may have dispersed — hence, the call for local residents to note licence plate numbers and other information that could lead to identification and a charge being laid.

"People demand instant attention but they have to realize that this isn't Kelowna — this is an unorganized area, and I might have just one car on at night. If he's at Fulford and there's a call at the north end, it might take half an hour to respond."

His officers can't be everywhere at all times, Sgt. Hanks continued. "We can't stay downtown all night. When the car goes through Ganges, the guys with the hot rods are angels — and as soon as he leaves, they start to squeal their tires again. What are you going to do?"

Sgt. Hanks reiterated that he has received few complaints about "hot-rodding," that RCMP have made a number of liquor seizures in the downtown core, and that the influx of visitors over the summer must be taken into account when viewing the noise and related problems that may crop up in Ganges.

In that light, he feels there are no major problems in the core — as compared to other jurisdictions — and that police must guard against over-reacting to the situation.

'Apathy is becoming an offence'

Dietrich said the incident involving the "airborne" cars is only one of many involving vehicles in the downtown core. "I've seen them at 3:30 (am), cruising the downtown, squealing their tires, yelling and screaming. They keep it up, going around and around the blocks."

He added that he has heard complaints about late-night disruptions in Centennial Park, and seen intoxicated youths walking the streets.

Dietrich said police should be controlling the situation but matters are complicated by logistics.

At night, calls to the Ganges RCMP detachment are picked up in Nanaimo, which relays complaints back to the island. By the time all that happens, Dietrich says, the offenders may have disappeared.

"But this situation has to stop if we want to make the island an attractive place to live, a good place for visitors, and to help commerce," he said.

It is no good, he added, for citizens to sit back and let the situation fester, hoping it will solve itself. "Apathy is becoming an offence," he said. "We can't just say this is a laid-back place and leave it at that. The only time you can lay back is when everyone obeys the rules."

Building activity still up in the Capital Regional District

Construction activity in the Gulf Islands continues to outpace levels reached a year ago.

Figures released last week by the Capital Regional District (CRD) building inspection office, giving breakdowns for the month of July and for the year to date, show more local construction has taken place in 1986 than in 1985.

Current construction activity runs ahead of the 1985 pace in all but one category — the Outer Island figures for July, 1986, are slightly behind those of July, 1985.

This July, residents on Saturna, Mayne, Galiano and Pender islands took out 24 permits for building work worth $408,907. A year ago, the numbers were 26 permits for work worth $511,627.

Permit charts show that most Outer Islands building activity this July was taking place on Galiano, which posted numbers well above those of the other three islands. A year ago, Pender and Mayne reported substantial construction work while the other islands were relatively dormant.

Outer Islands permit statistics for July, 1986, are as follows, with comparable 1985 figures in parentheses:

- Permits issued, 24 (26); value of work, $408,907 ($511,627), CRD permit revenue, $4,391 ($5,359).

On Salt Spring, increased building activity is most apparent in the plumbing field. In July, 1986, 20 permits were taken out for plumbing work, compared to 11 in the previous July. All other permit figures are essentially the same.

The full breakdown for Salt Spring this July is as follows, with statistics for July, 1985, in parentheses:

- Permits issued, 42 (30); value of work, $469,963 ($365,027); CRD permit revenue, $5,410 ($4,183).

Year-to-date comparisons between 1986 and 1985 show that Salt Spring experienced a substantial increase in building activity while the Outer Islands enjoyed only a slight jump.

In the year-to-date, Salt Spring statistics are as follows, with figures up to July, 1985, in parentheses:

- Permits issued, 277 (181); value of work, $3.126 million ($2.312 million); CRD permit revenue, $36,765 ($24,164).

Outer Islands figures to July, 1986, with statistics for the comparable 1985 period in parentheses, are as follows:

- Permits issued, 179 (149); value of work, $2.627 million ($2.377 million); CRD permit revenue, $28,140 ($25,744).

The increased activity on Salt Spring is, according to the CRD permit sheets, centred in the plumbing permit section: 52 such permits were taken out to July, 1985, while 129 were issued over the same period of 1986.

The increase coincides with start-up of the Ganges sewage treatment system early this year and the resulting hook-up of homes, businesses and institutions within its coverage area.

On the Outer Islands, building activity through the first seven months of 1986 shows that slight declines in all statistical categories were experienced — compared to 1985 — on three of the four islands. Galiano, meanwhile, was enjoying a substantial increase over levels reached to July, 1985.

Dollar values post hike

The dollar value of current Gulf Islands building activity is rapidly closing in on levels posted for all of 1985.

And on one island — Galiano — the value of construction projects done in the first seven months of 1986 is already double that of 1985.

The figures for 1985 are contained in the annual report of the Capital Regional District (CRD) municipal services department, released last week, while the data-to-date for 1986 is included in the CRD's monthly building inspection report for July.

Comparing the two sets of statistics shows that construction work carried out in the Gulf Islands over the first seven months of 1986 has been worth $5.75 million, while the value of buildings erected in all of 1985 was $7.3 million.

Island-by-island breakdowns of construction values are as follows, with year-to-date figures to July, 1986, posted first and numbers for all of 1985 in parentheses:

- Salt Spring Island, $3.126 million ($3.778 million);
- Pender Island, $1.023 million ($2.037 million);
- Mayne Island, $404,000 ($697,140); and
- Saturna Island, $119,250 ($180,048).

Breaking down information on permits issued indicates that new-home construction is the reason for the surge in building activity on Galiano. Over all of 1985, nine permits were taken out for single-family dwellings; to July 1985, 15 such permits had been issued.

Another distinct difference between this year and last is the 20 plumbing permits issued to July, 1985, on Galiano, compared to eight such permits taken out in all of 1985.

Another distinct difference between this year and last is the 20 plumbing permits issued to July, 1986, on Galiano, compared to eight such permits taken out in all of 1985.

Making good school better is goal of new Ganges principal

Aiming to make a "good school better," new Gulf Islands Secondary School (GISS) principal John Wellingham says he has several ideas for achieving that goal.

"I would like to see the school excel in all avenues: in academic areas, sports, art and cultural activities," he says. "The Gulf Islands school has a great reputation. I'm aiming to make a good school better in every possible area I can see."

Although he says he is unsure as yet what programs have already been offered, he would like to see strong anti-smoking, drug and alcohol programs incorporated into the curriculum. He feels such courses should be started in grade eight and carried on through the other grades.

According to Wellingham, a similar program proved highly successful at a Fraser Lake school — where he was last principal.

He says there were two student deaths in two consecutive years. In the six or seven years since the program was introduced there have been no further fatalities.

From an internal point of view, he would also like to see greater curriculum integration and planning, he says. The art department, for example, could produce backdrops for drama classes. Essays done for social studies could be combined with English studies, and marked for both writing skills and content.

"There is a whole avenue of work that can be explored," he says. "It brings more meaning to what the students are doing."

It is also Wellingham's policy to "keep abreast of current topics being discussed" by attending all school board meetings. He says he has been sitting in on board meetings for the past 11 years. "It allows the board members to informally ask me questions and allows me to pick up a lot of points the public has expressed."

Wellingham, who has worked as a principal in various schools for the past 19 years, immigrated to Canada from Australia in 1962. He received a Bachelor of Education degree in physics and chemistry from the University of British Columbia in 1968, to add to a degree in agriculture he obtained in Australia. In 1980, he completed his Masters degree at the University of Victoria. Three of his 19 years as principal were spent at a school in Scotland.

Wellingham is married with two children, one in grade 10 and another in grade 12.

"I feel very lucky to have been chosen for this job," Wellingham says. "I'm looking forward to getting involved in community organizations, once I get settled in."

Group decides on executive to represent Centennial Park

In an effort to clear lines of communication, members of the parks and recreation commission met Thursday with representatives of the Centennial Park Society.

Acting as chairman at the start of the meeting, Capital Regional District (CRD) director Hugh Borsman outlined some of the problems the two committees have been facing, describing one difficulty as "the right hand not knowing what the left hand is doing."

The group decided a joint executive, combining members of the two committees, is needed to overcome problems of fragmented authority. The decision, however, must be approved by the parks and recreation commission before such a committee will be formed.

Further discussion regarding a joint committee suggested such an organization should be opened up to include designers, fundraisers and members of both the Legion and the Chamber of Commerce.

Commission chairman Glenn Woodley said that because the commission now has responsibility for the park, it "should be aware of what's going to happen next." He noted that it is the commission which has to deal with the short-term financial and political implications stemming from any decision made.

"If the commission is going to be ultimately responsible," he said, "we want the channels of communication to be clear."

Local architect Jonathan Yardley, who has spent many hours working on park renovation plans, said he is troubled that the commission has not seemed to be aware of renovation plans and progress. He noted that presentations have been made to the commission, and that the commission has never responded with the desired input.

"There's been no comment; it's been very frustrating," he said.

"We're not saying the past phases have not been good," Woodley responded, "we would just like to be aware of these things."

Woodley said there is no future for the commission if it has to spend time battling the politics of decisions and directions taken. He stressed that the commission wants the opportunity to weigh all the short-term implications of decisions made.

Borsman, however, noted it is not the commission's position to change the renovation plans, which have already been presented to, and approved by the public. "The project has been presented to us as a whole, and the community has put a lot of time, effort and dollars into meeting those goals," he said.

Borsman had hoped some decisions concerning priorities for the next stages of renovations could be reached at the meeting. While the commission decided it would like to consider the possibilities at an upcoming meeting, Borsman said, new toilet arrangements — most likely a hook-up to the sewer — and initial work on the front of the park are likely to be the next steps.

Because the trees should be planted in the fall, he told the group, work needs to be undertaken soon.

The commission intends to prioritize the next stages as soon as possible.

Requirements outlined as fair day draws near

Editor's note: The Salt Spring Island Fall Fair opens at the Farmers' Institute in just over one week. In the article below, two co-ordinators outline the requirements for entries in their classes.

Now is the time to put aside special preserves, jams, jellies or relishes for entry into the fall fair. However, take note that jars should be the regulation preserving kind, with wax removed — failure to do so is cause for disqualification.

For further information, contact Daisy Gear at 537-2048.

The egg section received a good number of entries at last year's fair. Since eggs come in different colours and sizes, and as last year saw many questions asked about the criteria used for judging eggs, the following points could be helpful in preparing or selecting eggs for entry:

- Eggs must be classified by size in an egg carton.
- Eggs must be weighed before entering.
- Shells must be uniform in colour and texture.
- Eggs must be of similar size.
- Yolk neither too light nor too dark.
- Yolk must be centred in white.
- Yolk must be circular in shape.
- Eggs must be fresh — the albumen should sit up rather than spread out.

Despite its centuries-old tradition, beekeeping suffered a decline in popularity as society moved from a rural to an urban lifestyle. Beekeeping and honey production was left to the large, commercial producers.

The 1960s and 1970s, however, brought an increased interest in self-sufficient rural lifestyles and health, which caused an upsurge in beekeeping and small-scale honey production.

The Salt Spring Island Fall Fair will feature an interesting and informative display of beekeeping equipment. Arthur Beede's observation hive, which has attracted a good deal of attention in past years (as fair-goers search the mass of busy bees to find the queen) will be one item on display.

Honey entries, meanwhile, will be judged by criteria not quite as stringent as those for International Standard. The judging will be for colour, clarity, clean lines, viscosity and taste.

Domestic bees contribute greatly to fruit, flower and vegetable crops, and provide nature's finest sweetener.

Leo Martinez, co-ordinator of the fair's photography section, says it is imperative that all entries be received at Salt Spring Photo no later than 5 pm on Wednesday, September 17.

"Absolutely no entries will be accepted after that time," Martinez says, noting that all entry forms must be submitted by Saturday, September 13.

Martinez added that anyone with questions about the photography class should contact him at 537-5141, Monday to Saturday, between 10 am and 5 pm.

The fall fair will be held September 20 and 21. Unless otherwise noted, all entry forms must be turned in by September 13; entries must be delivered to the Farmers' Institute no later than September 19. Consult the guide book for further details or the names of co-ordinators to contact for information.

Woodlands group plans display

Beekeepers will have displays at the Fall Fair

Wanted: Island artisans who work with local wood, or residents who own a portable sawmill. The Gulf Islands Woodlands Association needs your help.

Association president Ken Renaud made the call last week in hopes "someone will come out of the woodwork" to help him line up a comprehensive display at the Salt Spring Island fall fair, to be held September 20 and 21 at the Farmers' Institute grounds on Rainbow Road.

Renaud said he has already lined up display space at the fair and intends to offer Forest Service brochures and portable mill pamphlets to the public. However, he'd also like to have on hand some exhibits that would better promote the association's aims.

Formed earlier this year, the woodlands association is a group of independent local woodlot operators and other parties interested in managing small timber farms. Its ultimate hopes are encouraging better utilization of the resource and developing markets for locally-produced wood.

Setting up a portable sawmill at the fall fair, Renaud said, would show people the type of wood products that can be cut locally. Local artisans, meanwhile, could demonstrate uses of that wood — be it in carvings or furniture.

"If we can get a mill," Renaud said, "we can show people what you can get from the local resource. If some artisans come out with a few of the things they make — cedar furniture, for example — we can show people what can be done with local wood."

The demonstrations, he continued, should help to generate interest in local woodlands and their productive potential.

Ideally, Renaud would like to set up a portable Oregon or Alaska mill. "If anyone has one," he said, "we'd like to see them come out of the woodwork."

Renaud can be contacted at 537-4154.

Along with offering practical demonstrations, Renaud said, the group would like to provide "a focus on the ecological and environmental" side of small woodlot operations. To that end, its fall fair display will include the presence of Gerry Blom, whose Salt Spring Island woodlot is acknowledged as the smallest certified tree farm operating in the province.

Edgar Kaiser not involved in Grace Point deal

Edgar Kaiser Jr., the chairman of the Bank of B.C., is not a member of a group of investors involved in the tentative sale of Grace Point.

Kaiser was rumoured to be among the purchasers when it was disclosed last week that a sale of the Ganges property is being discussed. However, his office in Vancouver later said the millionaire is not and has never been involved in the deal.

It is known that the group of prospective buyers includes island resident David Questo and well-known Canadian writer Peter C. Newman. Current owner of the property is Mountain Park Farm, a company headed by local resident Norman Mouat.

Mouat said last week the sale of Grace Point is still tentative and had only progressed to the point where documentation was being finalized. He noted that a sale would include development plans drawn up for Grace Point, as well as the property itself.

Meanwhile, Questo has declined comment on the possible transfer of ownership or the impact it might have on any development of Grace Point.

A conceptual plan for Grace Point, presented late last year to an Islands Trust meeting, called for construction of about 24 housing units. The concept was tied to re-development of adjacent commercial properties and made allowance for such concerns as pedestrian access and parking in the downtown core.

It is also felt that any change to the scope of a Grace Point development would be disclosed shortly after a sale is finalized — if, indeed, the sale goes through.

That's because one aspect of redevelopment is to provide a new home for the Ganges liquor store, and the project has been tentatively slated to be underway by spring. Island Trustee Nick Gilbert indicated earlier that the permits process means plans for that project would probably have to be submitted before the year is out.

Now is the best time for putting in lawn

For hundreds of years, the lawn has been a vital element in landscaping, providing a broad sweep of green to serve as a canvas for colour displays in border beds, island beds, and foundation plantings.

The lawn ties the whole design together and at the same time is a ground cover that permits daily foot traffic. It allows us to enjoy outdoor activities and sports on it, and all the while, prevents erosion and stabilizes the soil.

To many in the Gulf Islands, a lawn is seen as that patch of green over the septic field that is a mixed ground cover made up of various weeds, pernicious white clover and enough blades of grass to enable us to justify mowing it periodically. However, for the remainder of this article, a lawn shall be seen as a pure planting of mixed grasses, a ground cover that allows multiple uses, and as an asset to the landscape design.

Mid-September is the best time for putting in a lawn; it gives the grass two months to establish itself before it goes dormant for the winter. The second best time is in late March and April.

To start at the beginning, we should spend some time on the soil — the growing basis for a healthy, long-lived lawn. While a sandy loam soil is best, most of us are cursed with a clay hardpan, a shale pit or ten truckloads of the best fill that a gravel pit can yield for septic field material. If you have clay, organic matter should be built up by adding three inches or so of sawdust, shavings, fine screened mulch or, if money is no object, peat moss.

Sawdust is the most preferable, and whenever you use it you should add 1.5 pounds of actual nitrogen for each inch of sawdust spread out over an area of 1000 square feet (roughly a half pound per cubic yard of sawdust). This for example would mean using four pounds of 34-0-0 over 1000 square feet for each inch (1.3 pounds of 34-0-0 per cubic yard of sawdust). The next year use half as much nitrogen as a topdressing. The addition of sawdust also will help to improve the water-retaining ability of a shale based or sandy-gravelly soil that dries out

by

too quickly. Two and a half inches of sawdust will hold one inch of water, a reserve for plants to access between waterings. Overall, sawdust helps to improve both the drainage of heavy soils and the moisture-retention on light, coarse soils, but you should never add more than four inches, as this can cause nutrient stresses and mixing problems.

For established lawns, a half-inch topdressing of sawdust is very beneficial, but don't forget to add that bit of nitrogen to aid the microbes and bacteria in their efforts to break down the sawdust. Try to avoid using pure cedar sawdust, as it can harm young seedlings. Allow a season or two for the rains to leach out the toxic volatiles and oils, before using it.

Before doing any construction, or changing grades and slopes, try to scrape off and set aside as much topsoil as is possible, as it will be required later on for a healthy lawn. Don't use the future lawn site to bury debris, logs or waste wood from construction activities, as this is the cause and breeding source for the damaging fungi that causes "fairy rings." If you are already plagued with such a problem in your existing lawn, then cultivate deeply (12 to 16 inches) now to remove the wood and mix the organic matter with the soil.

Getting back to the new lawn, the next step is to develop and set the grades and slopes the lawn is to assume. Try to have enough slope to permit good surface drainage and to avoid the creation of pockets, and depressions that become pools and lakes when it rains heavily during winter. Once the "lie of the land" is corrected, till the soil to ensure that the top four to six inches of subsoil have been loosened to ensure good drainage. Pick off and dig out rocks that are loose, but don't get too carried away, because the next step is to add back on at least four, and preferably six inches of that topsoil you set aside earlier.

This is the point at which you should add that sawdust and mix it in thoroughly. The whole lawn area should be relatively free of stones and roots to allow smooth raking. Now, raking is an almost endless labour, but is necessary in order to achieve a level, uniform base for the lawn. Rake to remove stones, roots and perennial weed-roots, and also to even out the surface. Then re-rake in another direction to smooth out all existing bumps, ridges and depressions. A wide, straight landscape rake is invaluable at this stage to ensure a smooth lawn.

Roll the area to settle the soil in quickly: this allows you to see imperfections that should be evened out now, rather than with difficulty later on when the lawn has been seeded down. The lawnmower doesn't appreciate being used as an earth-moving device.

Virtually all of the soils in the Gulf Islands would benefit from the application of some lime to increase the pH. Up to 20 kilograms per 100 square metres (45 pounds per 1000 square feet) may be added at one time, and if the pH is below five then another equal application should be applied again next year. Use dolomite lime or straight garden lime, but avoid using hydrated lime unless the pH is an urgent problem, i.e. below 4.5. Also, for the establishment period, you should be using a fertilizer with an N:P:K ratio of 1:3:1 to stimulate good root development. Rake these materials in well and smooth rake the surface again.

Next, seed the area down with grass seed at the rate of one pound for every 150 to 200 square feet, using either a cyclone seeder or by careful hand broadcasting. The next thing to do is rake the seed in very lightly, using a leaf rake, and water in well. Then roll the lawn area to pack the seed down and follow this with another watering. Keep the surface from drying out, watering daily if needed, but don't saturate the soil and make small lakes and rivers that will carry away your carefully-placed and valuable seed. Easy does it. In a couple of weeks, the lawn will be up and growing.

Next week, we'll talk about mowing, caring for, and feeding the lawn.

Eyesight neglected by many

Editor's note: On October 4, the Salt Spring Community Centre and the local chapter of the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. will sponsor a health fair in Ganges to discuss various aspects and methods of care. Each week between now and then, an aspect of the fair's agenda will be covered in the following column, submitted by the Community Centre.

We have access to advanced facilities for the care of vision. Nevertheless, whether out of vanity or unfamiliarity with the elementary principles of proper vision care, a large number of people continue to neglect their eyesight.

Periodic eye examination should be part of a regular physical checkup.

The Canadian National Institute for the Blind (CNIB) will be in attendance at the Health Fair on October 4. Its representatives will conduct simple vision testing and make us aware of the many services which are available for those with eye problems.

Glaucoma is a disease in which fluid within the eye builds up, causing abnormally high pressure. If untreated, this condition could cause blindness. It is recommended that persons over 35 years should be checked for it every two years.

Cataracts are a clouding of the lens of the eye that blurs the vision. It is most often found in persons over 55 but may also result from specific diseases, injury, or exposure to radiation or toxic materials.

What about contact lenses? Hard lens or soft flexible lens? At what age should a child's vision be checked? These and other questions will be answered for you at the CNIB booth at the Health Fair.

The care of our teeth is equally as important as the care of our eyes. Visit our local dentist at the Health Fair and see if you are doing everything you possibly can to maintain strong, healthy teeth for the rest of your life.

Jane Hamilton

Two new reporters joined the Driftwood staff this week.

Jane Hamilton, a 30-year-old University of Victoria Co-op student, takes over the Outer Islands beat from Catherine Lang, who is returning to school after her work term. Hamilton graduated from the UVic program in April, and is completing her course requirements with this assignment.

She is moving to Pender Island, where she'll follow events on the islands. Originally from Toronto, Hamilton has worked in publishing houses in Victoria and Toronto. She hopes to get in some windsurfing while living on Pender.

She can be reached at 629-6449 if readers should wish to contact her with Outer Islands news.

Taking up residence in Fulford Harbour is general reporter Eric Eggertson, and his spouse Kelley Burke. They arrive from Whitehorse where Eric worked on the thrice-weekly Yukon News and Kelley worked as a freelance writer.

Before that Eric, 27, was a photographer on the North Shore News in North Vancouver.

Police report

A car stolen from Mahon Hall early Sunday morning was recovered several hours later, local RCMP report.

The 1965 Chevrolet, owned by Sandra Noore-Black, was stolen at approximately 1:30 am. It was discovered abandoned in a private driveway in the 2100 block Fulford-Ganges Road approximately eight hours later.

Keys to the car were found in the ignition.

A Ganges youth was issued with a traffic ticket information after losing control of his vehicle and crashing into a ditch last week.

The fence of the Burgoyne United Church in Fulford was damaged in the incident, which occurred at 5 am Sunday, August 31.

As a result of the accident, in which the vehicle was damaged beyond repair, Lincoln Ingram of Ganges was issued a traffic ticket information for failing to produce a driver's license, driving too fast, and for driving without a seatbelt.

Bill Clements and his home-built and designed biplane

Bill Clements' biplane is very docile airplane to fly

By SUSAN DICKER

Salt Spring Islander Bill Clements has brought more than just his 1930s flying experience into the 1980s.

With his home-built and designed biplane, Clements has kept alive the style and tradition of the two-winged, open cockpit airplane.

"It's reminiscent of the DeHavilland Cirrus Moss," says Clements of the plane he regularly flies to Vancouver. "We had them in Calgary in 1931."

In the 1930s Clements was a Calgarian hangar rat, hovering around the airstrip, washing and fixing up the planes. For his efforts, he received dual flying instruction on the weekends. He's still got the airplane bug.

An airplane mechanic during the war, he also spent much of his life doing lettering for aircraft. Now retired, he volunteers with the Canadian Warplane Heritage, restoring craft similar to the one he flies to work.

Clements began the design and construction of his biplane in 1967. He made a few drawings and kept contact with an aviation expert who "slapped (his) wrists" if he went off track. Building it on and off for seven years, he finally completed it in 1974.

According to Clements, the design is similar to the 1925 Cirrus Moss, of which there is only one in the world still flying. Although Clements has lent out his plans, craft such as his have not materialized. "Mine is the one and only," he says.

Flying the biplane from Calgary to Salt Spring Island in 1974 was a memorable experience, Clements says. It took him and a pilot friend from Chemainus eight hours of flying time.

"We followed the highway the whole way," he says. "We never went above 8,000 feet."

The biplane is slower than a modern aircraft, which has better airfoil designs, Clements explains. "Mine is a 1925 airplane, and it flies like one." The half hour it takes him to fly from the Greenspring Farm airstrip on Salt

Spring to Delta, however, beats ferry travel time.

"It's always been noteworthy, wherever he goes," says Clements' wife Mary, describing the interest his biplane evokes. In 1974 the Calgary Stampede staged a Salute to Aviation and the promotion poster featured Clements grinning in his plane's open cockpit. To bring it in line with the stampede, the goggled pilot also wore a cowboy hat.

Clements has participated in airshow fly-pasts numerous times; he has been part of the Abbotsford airshow's home-built display for eight or nine years.

While he does not take his plane through rolls and loops, he says "it goes around like a top," when he puts through a stall turn and spin. "It's a very docile airplane to fly," he says.

Clements' flying enthusiasm has worked its way into his offspring. One son is a commercial pilot and the other two are airplane buffs. Two of Clements' grandsons have private pilot licenses.

But the monoplanes just don't match up, Clements says. "It's like the difference between riding on a motorcycle and a bus: it's windy, noisy and cold."

But a monoplane, he says, is just a flying machine. "It's got to have two (sets of) wings to be an airplane."

Ambulance attendants shortage 'critical'

A desperate plea has been issued by the Emergency Health Services Commission, Galiano Division. "There is a critical shortage of trained ambulance attendants," declared Laura Gerlach, unit chief administrator, last Sunday, "to the point where only one will be on call in November."

Do you live in the South End? Do you have a strong back and are you able to lift and carry? Then you qualify to take part in this vital life-saving, paying, community responsibility.

Connie Kennedy, spokesperson for the service group, also conveyed this serious message. She explained that time requirements are related to the number of trained staff. One person must be on call 30 days per month, whereas an ideal 10 people would mean each person is only on call for two to three days. The schedule, made one month in advance, is highly flexible. Most calls take 45 minutes to one hour at the most, therefore you can conceivably work at a regular job at the same time. You can choose to be on call at night, or if you have children, arrange for

galiano report

by

impromptu child care while on call.

The course required, Industrial First Aid, is 60 hours, stretched over one week, with a written and practical examination the next week. Saint John's Ambulance will cover the $250 cost per student.

Officials hope the enrollment will be 20 or more and are considering bringing the lessons here. The licence graduates receive is good for one year, but an update will reinstate it for a further three years.

Gerlach provided the following statistics, revealing the number of calls attended since January 1985, and their distribution. Code 2 is a non-life-threatening situation, such as a broken leg or a bike spill. Code 3 is a life-threatening situation, such as a heart attack or serious accident.

All numbers below represent Code 2/Code 3.
1985, January to December: 3/1, 1/1, 0/0, 3/2, 4/3, 4/2, 4/5, 6/0, 2/3, 2/0, 2/1, 1/1.

1986, January to present: 0/0, 4/1, 2/2, 5/1, 6/3, 4/3, 1/0, 7/1. So far in September, one code 3.

Those 1985 numbers were also categorized by weekday. For the whole year, Monday 6/2, Tuesday 6/5, Wednesday 3/3, Thursday 2/6, Friday 4/0, Saturday 5/2, Sunday 6/1.

Fifty-one calls in total were made in 1985, an average of one call per week. At a glance, calls tend to be more frequent in the summer. The number of calls could easily be handled by a team of 10 attendants, but with one and two people on call 24 hours a day, the situation is dangerously demanding.

You are urged to attend a meeting on Tuesday, September 23, 7 pm at the South End Fire Hall, even if you don't qualify. Until the next notice, if you have related questions, call Laura Gerlach at 539-2833.

Terry Fox Run

Dust off your sneakers, bicycles, saddles, the "run" is on! This Sunday everyone is urged to participate in the 8 km annual event which pays tribute to the young, courageous spirit of Terry Fox.

If there is ever a time for participation, it is on that day. Terry Fox, who died of cancer during his run across Canada to raise money for cancer research five years ago, humbly believed that he, one person, could possibly make a difference, and did.

Eight kilometres is a far cry from the close to 8,000 Terry hoped to cover, but you too can make a difference.

The "run" begins at 1 pm at the South Galiano Community Hall and circles Burrill Road, Bluff Park Road, Georgeson Bay Road then back to the hall. Three refreshment stands will be set up and Bluff Park will be opened temporarily. (It is presently closed due to the fire hazard.)

Businesses on the island are donating prizes to be awarded randomly. Funds for research are raised through individual or team sponsorship. Sponsor sheets may be obtained at Galiano Garage, Burrill Brothers, the Corner Store and Hummingbird Pub.

Participate as an individual, family or team, do the circuit yourself or relay with others. Photographs will be published in next week's paper. See you there!

Design group visits Pender to work on new book

Through August, core members of a non-profit group called the Pacific Co-Design Society were busy working on North Pender with architectural projects. Stanley King, the founder and president of the group, owns land here and brought three of his colleagues to Pender to reap the benefits of working in a quiet, pastoral setting.

Merinda Conley, Bill Latimer and Drew Ferrari came with King from Calgary to work on a book to be published by VanNostrand Rhineholt in 1988. The effort, described by King as "partly a how-to book," will outline his workshop process for designing public buildings and parks.

Also to be included in the 196-page work will be photographs of architecture (such as Robson Square in Vancouver) which echoed ideas suggested by the public, and instructions for designers interested in the cooperative design process.

King, who teaches at the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology (SAIT), has been conducting public workshops to generate design ideas for about 15 years.

"In the early days, it was mostly done for free," he said, explaining that the process occupied his spare hours or took place when he received research grants while studying at UBC.

Since then, King has conducted workshops with over 10,000 people — the Robson Square and False Creek developments in Vancouver, and Calgary's Civic Centre, are among the more notable results of those workshops.

King said he started to work with children in the early stages, noting their concerns about playground areas, which led to work in schools. He later did a series of designs in conjunction with the Vancouver School Board for children's parks in East Vancouver.

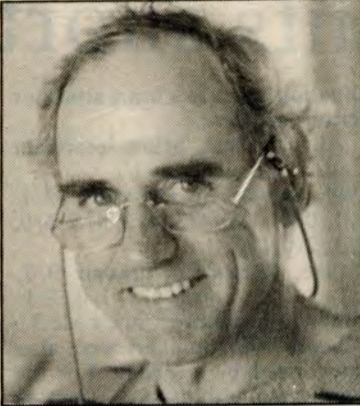

Part of King's philosophy is to involve children — from the age of eight years and up — in his public workshops. He said their presence is important because they are often more sensitive than adults in assessing what is needed in a building or a park.

Based on American studies of the Japanese consultative process, King said he adapted his ideas on the premise of bringing together those who would be working or playing in and around the site.

"We maintain that the users of the building are the best ones to tell the designers what is needed," he said, noting also that when the Japanese consult workers for design ideas, morale improves.

The same applies to a community, said King. "People have some sense that it is their place. And in all cases where we have involved the public, vandalism has been reduced or non-existent."

During a workshop, people are asked to list all the activities that might happen at the new site. Following this, groups of three to four people will go on a site tour with one of the artists, looking for areas of sunlight and shade, listening and smelling the environment, and getting some sense of mood as they imagine how they would like the design to develop.

"It's a cheerful thing, because they realize the site is a really vibrant place," said King.

When the groups return to the workshop area, people tell the artists their ideas, and the drawing of designs begins. King said they start with a figure (an unorthodox approach in traditional architecture), and then they fill in furnishings, rooms, and colours. By the end of the workshop, King said participants have stopped looking at the artists and they view the drawing as their own. "We have become an extension of their hands and eyes. It ends up as their drawing."

The advantages for the designer are many. "It's a very quick way to get a lot of genuine public involvement. In a short time we get a great deal of information related to the future activities that would take place there," said King.

Bank to open branch at Pender

Pender Island may be getting its own bank.

The Bank of British Columbia's Douglas and Hillside branch in Victoria is working on setting up an agency office in the Driftwood Centre. It could be open for business as early as next week.

The first financial institution ever located on the island, the office would operate as a sub-branch of the Douglas Street branch. All regular banking services, including deposit facilities, cheque-cashing privileges, RRSPs, term deposits, etc. would be available to Bank of B.C. account holders, and, of course, new customers would be welcome.

Community club profits from tourney, chicken barbecue

Summer is still here, even though Labour Day has come and gone. The kids come home from school sweaty and hot, the sleeves of jackets and sweaters tied around their waists. The blackberries are ripening to perfection and the corn is racing ahead. Part of me worries that fall is coming, and all of me glories in the sunshine.

The Labour Day baseball tournament and chicken barbecue was much enjoyed. Baseball fans had two days of hot competition and, for a respite, a good dinner and dance. The chicken was deep fried and then baked, and the corn was boiled and outstanding.

The community club certainly made some money to replenish its coffers. Thanks go to the club members who gave lots of time and effort, and to the community members (in most cases, one and the same people) who attended.

The students going to Mayne Island have a much improved boat schedule this year. Instead of leaving at 7:05 am, they leave at 8:45 am. The schedule allows them to once again be members of the family in the morning, since most people are sleep-walking before 7 am.

The August 23 Islands Trust hearing was well attended, with close to 80 people turning out to discuss John Gaines' proposal and application for a temporary zoning permit.

At the beginning of the open-air hearing, Gaines said he was withdrawing his application in view of island sentiment and because the economic opportunity had passed. He said he would be back with further proposals.

He also replied to comments he had heard within the community, that he was using his Islands Trust position to further his application, saying it was not the case.

He explained that he had followed the stated procedures in buying land — ministerial per-saturna scene

by

mission — and followed the recommendation that the land be put in the name of a company.

Much discussion followed about the particular proposal and its possible impact on the island; about the use, function and applicability of temporary use permits to the Saturna community; and the question of conflict of interest.

The discussion was full of questions addressed to John Gaines and to the Islands Trust about procedures, zoning changes, what uses a temporary use permit would serve, and whether the permit would work in a small, close community.

The Trust then voted not to include temporary use permits in the bylaw.

Lorraine Campbell has located the two fall fair trophies. The cup for the child or adult who wins the most points, and the plaque for the child with the most points, were last seen in 1954.

Lorraine's mother, Helen Thompson, donated the cup in memory of her husband, A.R. Thompson. The names engraved on it so far are: Ernie Atkinson (1951), Fred Giblin (1952), Orma Ostrom (1953) and Flora M. Corey (1954).

The children's plaque is being repaired. The names I remember are Betty Money and Mary Gaines.

Class entry cards, the catalogue of classes, and the rules for judging are at the post office. The flower, fruit and vegetable judges have asked that exhibits be labelled for variety (in the class card) wherever possible, since our categories are so broad.

The procedure is to choose an entry to exhibit, buy a card for 25 cents, fill it out and check the rules for judging — i.e., don't wash potatoes, take stalks off some vegetables, leave stems on fruit, etc. Good luck.

On August 27, the second annual Saturna Trivial Pursuit tournament was held at the home of Dale Johnson.

The 'Saturna Permanents' included Melanie Gaines, Beth and Katie Jones, Mary-Lee Campbell and Dale Johnson, all of Saturna.

The 'Saturna Summer Transients' team was comprised of Sandi O'Bade of California, Kathy and Kim Stonehouse of Surrey, and Lynne Scott of Richmond.

Officiating was Mrs. Toots Wells of Boundary Bay.

The 'Saturna Permanents' won the tournament with two close games and one walkaway.

Design group at Pender

And to return to the same group for a second workshop has further advantages. King said people modify their original ideas, reducing the overall cost and scope of the project.

As an example of the success of this method, King pointed to the reaction from designs his colleague Merinda Conley produced for the Cowichan Lake Centre. Conley's designs followed workshops King held in the summer of 1984 for the UVic seminar centre. Conley said that out of the entire project, the only criticism was the colour of one of the tents.

She said that design ideas normally must be re-worked, and that "quite a bit of money" is wasted in the revision stage — two aspects of the design process that the workshop method attempts to avoid.

Most Co-Design workshops produced drawings that were passed onto architects for final drafts. The group hopes to expand and work on more projects that start with the workshop and finish with completed architectural designs.

In the meantime, they do meet with resistance from architects who prefer traditional methods. "They get very disturbed at the idea of people who aren't experts being involved in the process," said King.

His method, he continues, can often have greater cost-savings without reducing quality.

For instance, he said professionals tend to choose Cadillac models for jobs that can be adequately performed by a Ford. Sometimes it is because they want their work to be associated with the top league, often when it isn't necessary.

Bill Latimer adds that instead of having to cope with "people's crazy ideas" as some architects fear, the workshops encourage creativity. "Far from being restrictive, it gives us the ability to produce some very different and exciting work."

To reach Co-Design, write to Stanley King, 729 - 15th St. N.W., Calgary. T2N 2B3, or phone 283-3126.

Sixty-nine children attend elementary school mysterious, feared and revered clubhouse, where the grand poobahs and the tender subjects create echoes in the halls, and memories to be retrieved only in a dozen years or more.

A short education report focussing on the elementary level for those of us who may wonder:

Sixty-nine children are enrolled at the Galiano Island Elementary School, and attend kindergarten to grade seven. Louise Miller teaches the kindergarten class every morning, Lynne Scott handles grades one and half of two, Catherine Maneker (back from Japan) the other half of two plus grades three and four, and Elisabeth Brinson teaches grades five, six and seven and music. Ms. Brinson is also the principal, who is relieved during administration time by French and physical education teacher Virginia Wihak (new). Stephen Nemtin is learning assistant and special education teacher.

The school and activity centre are located on Sturdies Bay Road. It is a good leap from one-room schoolhouses of the past, and boasts a fabulous gymnasium, small library and a computer in each of the three classrooms. It does not boast of the portable classroom, however, and an expansion is in the hope stage. Large kindergarten classes are anticipated and more room will allow a larger library.

Coming Events

- Terry Fox Run Sunday, South Galiano Community Hall. See details above.

- Sunday: Saint Margaret's of Scotland, 10:30 am, Rev. Pocock will hold regular service.
- Monday: Preschool meeting, 7 pm at George and Vera's cabin. See details above.
- Tuesday: seniors' trip to Expo 86. Note: not restricted to seniors. Round trip by bus from Tsawwassen ferry, $10. Call Les Woodbridge at 539-5764 or Dorothy Hansom at 539-2445.

Golf notes

Bright and sunny weather produced a good turnout for recent Roddick Trophy play. Truci Fichtl and Roger Shaw captured the title in a nine-hole playoff against Mary Roddick and Bill Norton after the two teams were tied over 18 holes.

Marge Bistow won the recent 18-hole Tombstone tournament, which drew 30 ladies.

August 20 winner was Dorothy Henshaw. In 18-hole section play, Henshaw tied with Margo Irving for low gross honours, tied with Edie Murray for the low net title, and won the putt pot. Marge Clarke was first on.

In ladies 18-hole play on August 27, Marge Clarke won low gross honours, Ann Richards took the low net prize, June Allen was closest to the pin and Margo Irving took the putt pot.

The Pender branch of the Royal Canadian Legion held the first section of its tournament on August 17. Charlie Johnson captured both the low gross and low net trophies, Walt Conway had the longest drive, Bob Bugg took the hidden hole, Tim Appleby was closest to the pin, and Jim Hambey won the 'hot shot' prize.

September is a busy month for Pender golfers. On September 3, the ladies competed for the Corbett-Martin trophy; on September 5, play was held for the Clarke mixed tournament; and on September 9, the Mayne-Pender trophy for mixed play was contested. Coming up is the Royal Canadian Legion's South Vancouver Island zone tournament (September 13 and 14), and the popular Buster Williams tournament (September 19) for mixed teams.

The men turned out in full force for August 28 play. Elmer Bowerman had the longest drive over the first nine holes, while Charlie Johnson took that honour on the back nine. Bud Bedford won the low net prize on the front nine, and George Taylor captured low net over the final nine holes.

The South Vancouver Island Zone of the Royal Canadian Legion will hold its tournament on Pender on September 13 and 14. Teams of four players from each of the 11 branches will compete in the 36-hole event. Contact Peter Campbell for further information.

ISLANDS TRUST
Salt Spring Island Trust Committee
NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

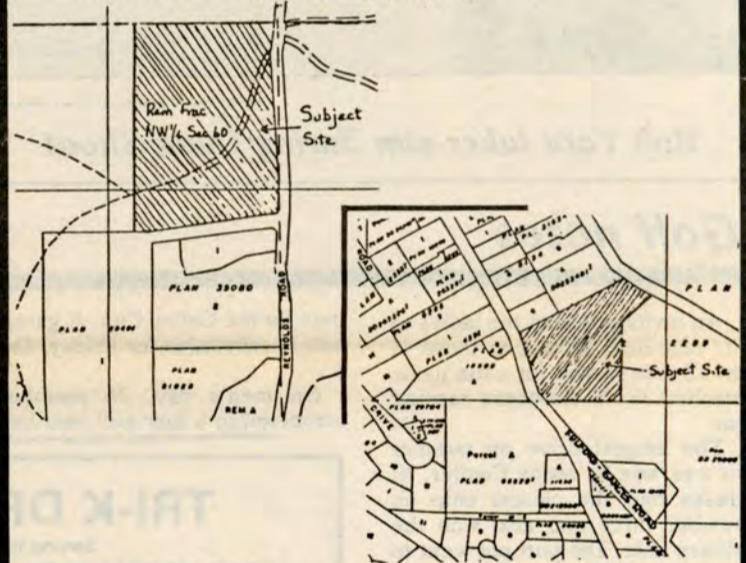

NOTICE is hereby given that all persons who deem their interest in property affected by the following proposed by-laws will be afforded an opportunity to be heard on the matters contained therein at a Public Hearing to be held at the Harbour House Hotel, Ganges, Salt Spring Island, on FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1986, COMMENCING AT 1:30 P.M.

(a) Proposed Salt Spring Island Trust Committee By-law No. 165 is a by-law to amend "Zoning By-law, Salt Spring Island, 1985", being By-law No. 123. In general terms the intent of the proposed by-law is to establish a new zoning classification, Industrial 5 Zone (I5), which permits land uses such as light industry including manufacturing, processing, assembly, testing, servicing and repairs conducted within a building, bakeries, warehouses and storage buildings, wholesale, storage lots for undamaged vehicles, mechanical repairs, saw and planing mills, veterinary hospitals, farm use, aggregate storage and stockpiling, vocational schools, home occupations, and one dwelling unit.

The by-law also contains regulations relating to site coverage, building height, and setback distances from lot lines.

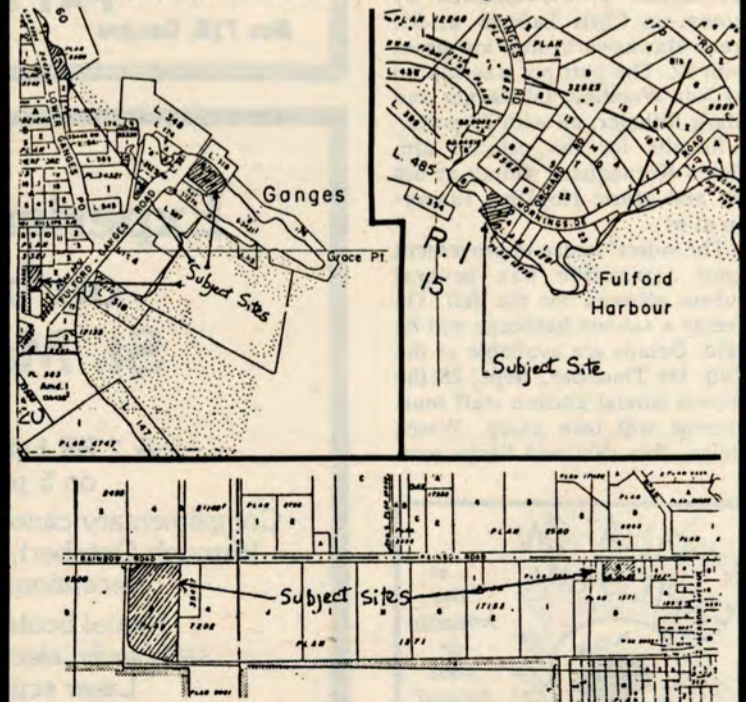

The by-law also changes the zoning classification of a portion of Lot 2, Plan 2289, Section 18, North Salt Spring Island, except Plans 3960 and 6134 and Parcel 'A', DD 2534811, and a portion of the Remainder of the Fractional N.W. 1/4 of Section 60, South Salt Spring Island from the Industrial 4 Zone (I4) to the Industrial 5 Zone (I5).

The locations of the lands subject of the by-law alteration are shown in the following sketches:

(b) Proposed Salt Spring Island Trust Committee By-law No. 166 is a by-law to amend "Zoning By-law, Salt Spring Island, 1985", being By-law No. 123.

In general terms the intent of the proposed by-law is to exclude the manufacture or processing of asphalt or asphalt products as a permitted use in the Industrial 4 Zone (I4). The locations of the lands subject of the by-law alteration are shown in the following sketches:

A copy of the proposed by-laws may be inspected at the Islands Trust Office, 747 Fort Street, Victoria, B.C. between the hours of 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday to Friday, inclusive.

For the convenience of the public only, and not to satisfy Section 957(2)v of the Municipal Amendment Act, 1985, an additional copy of the proposed by-laws may be inspected at the Capital Regional District Building Inspection Office, Salt Spring Island.

Bob Tara takes aim during Luau Shoot

Luau Shoot draws 100 to facilities

Over 100 people attended last weekend's Luau Shoot at the Salt Spring Island Rod and Gun Club's newly renovated facilities.

Winner of the high gun trophy was Lloyd Newton of the South Vancouver Island Rangers. Cowichan's John Orr took the men's runner-up position.

The ladies' high gun trophy went to Cheryl Keller of Nanaimo, who was followed by runner-up Anne Waters of Cowichan.

Gordie Scarff of Salt Spring took the the Vet Trophy and the low score was won by Pauline Muers of Heriot Bay.

Calcutta winners included Newton, with a score of 93; Orr (Cowichan) and Bruce Gillespie of Victoria Fish and Game, with 92; Salt Spring Island's John Bennett and Danny Reynolds, Victoria's Mike Patenaude, and Campbell River's Andy Howich, all with a score of 91.

According to Ellen Bennett, "Everybody had a great time."

Bylaw to ban dogs

An unofficial ban on dogs from Salt Spring Island beaches is almost over, but by next summer the dog ban should be official.

Several beaches on the island were patrolled this summer, but without a bylaw against dogs on beaches, animal control officers could do little but talk to people walking dogs on well-used beaches.

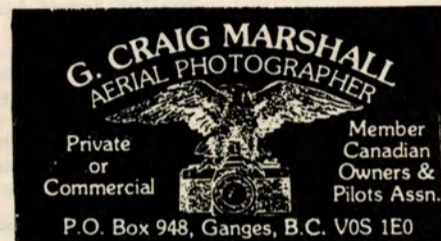

"This year we've patrolled the beaches and talked to people," deputy animal control officer Howard Byron said Tuesday. "Most people have been cooperative on this situation."

The proposed bylaw will outlaw dogs on at least three beaches from the beginning of June to the end of September. If the bylaw is passed, animal control officers will be able to post signs banning dogs, and ticket dog owners who disobey the ban.

"There are all sorts of beaches not suitable for bathing where people can walk their dogs," Byron said. The ban would only be in effect during peak swimming months, he added.

The three beaches patrolled this summer were Vesuvius, Drummond Park and Bader's, at the end of Collins Road.

Golf notes

An invitation from the ladies in the nine-hole section to those in the 18-hole section for a fun game resulted in 45 members turning out.

The longest drive on number six was won by Mona Coulter. Vi Huska had the closest chip on number three and also won the hidden hole. The putt pot went to Doris Beach, and Alice Brown and Helen Insley scored chip-ins on number one and eight respectively.

In the ladies' 18-hole division, 44 golfers teed off in the second round of the two-day eclectic. Low net for the day was Helen Kernaghan at 64, followed by runner-up Chris LaGrow at 65. Irene Hawksworth won low gross with 82. The putt pot was shared by Ada Woodley, Lil Rayner and Marg Rithaler, all with 29 putts.

Results for the eclectic are: Helen Kernaghan, winner at net 60, and Marie Hopkins, runner-up at 61.

The ladies' house improvement fund committee has several events planned for the fall. On Friday a salmon barbecue will be held. Details are available at the club. On Thursday, Sept. 25 the second annual kitchen staff tournament will take place. Watch Helga, Eva, Val and Sonja compete for the Galley Cup. A garage sale is scheduled for Friday, Oct. 3.

On men's day, 36 members competed in a four-ball best ball.

"An Original Canadian Classic"

Best year ever for Stacey, McQuiggan

Local tennis aces Peggy Stacey and Gordon McQuiggan capped their best year ever by sweeping every event in the recent Gulf Islands tennis tournament.

Stacey started the run when she teamed with Wendy Smith to capture the ladies doubles title from runners-up Barb Davis and Marion Lankester.

McQuiggan followed suit when he and teammate Paul Maron took the men's doubles final over the Southey Point Chicken Ranch team of John Olson and Cec Branson.

In the mixed doubles event, Stacey and McQuiggan had little trouble winning against finalists Marion Lankester and tournament organizer Ron Rajsic.

Pender Island player Nancy Scott turned in an outstanding performance against Stacey in the ladies singles event but eventually lost in straight sets to the smooth and steady play of the defending champion.

McQuiggan finished the sweep by defeating two-time men's singles champ Paul Maron. After taking a close first set, Maron showed the style that got him promoted to A level play this year and swept through the next set by a 6-1 score.

Suprisingly, his singles title was McQuiggan's first in the men's division — in previous years, he had lost to Maron and frequent islands champion Toby Seward.

With Stacey and McQuiggan dominating the championship flight, some of the best of the 65 matches in the tournament were found in consolation flight play.

After Lisa Lloyd and Susan Blagborne played a strong match against Cathy Taylor and Roberta Maron to take the ladies doubles consolation title, they faced each other for the singles consolation crown. Lloyd took the title in two sets.

The mixed doubles consolation championship produced one of the best and hardest-fought match-ups of the two-week competition, when Cathy Taylor and Jorge Coehlo edged Trevor and Paddy Beyers in a spectacular, three-set match.

David Kos and Ted Baldwinson downed Wayne Taylor and Gordon Speed in the men's doubles consolation final, while Kos took the men's singles consolation in an outstanding match with Pender Island resident Bill Hanson.

The Salt Spring Tennis Association schedule features four more events over the next two months. A mixed doubles tournament is scheduled for September 14, and a ladies doubles event for September 27. Also coming up is a men's doubles tournament in October, and the annual meeting and awards dinner the same month.

Participation in all of these events is open to all players, both resident and visitor. Watch Driftwood for registration details.

Fisherman has big smile over 40-pound spring

Weekend Salt Spring Island resident Beth Drummond can't sleep because her smile goes from ear to ear, says her husband Barry.

After fishing for years in the waters off Porlier Pass, and coming home with nothing greater than a nine-pounder, Drummond snagged a 40-pound spring salmon last Saturday.

It took approximately 20 minutes to haul in the catch, according to her husband, and the fish snapped the net.

"All the Americans go in there and get 25-pounders at best," he said, noting he had never heard of such a large catch in that area.

The two were fishing late Saturday afternoon, in about 70 feet of water. "It was in between tides," Barry Drummond said. "We weren't supposed to catch any fish then."

Bruhanski active this fall

By GARY CHERNEFF

This fall, Alex Bruhanski will again be active in the theatre scene on Salt Spring Island.

Since coming to the island his teaching abilities and extensive experience as an actor and a director have immeasurably enhanced the already-healthy amateur theatre scene.

His acting classes are continuing this fall, but this time he will offer two adult sessions. One will be for persons interested in actually performing and the other is tailored to people interested in theatre but not necessarily anxious to be on the stage. Bruhanski terms this "recreational acting" and the emphasis will be on improvisation. The performance-oriented sessions will involve script work, scene preparation and a lot of homework.

For teenagers between the ages of 13 and 17 years, Bruhanski will introduce a project called "Teen Power Theatre." His concept is to recruit kids who may not have theatre backgrounds in school but who do need a constructive, expressive outlet for their energy.

He is hoping to provide the

means for kids to create their own shows based on their unique life experiences. Personal statements and musical performance could play important roles in the experience.

Bruhanski feels that the structure and format of theatre programs within schools often precludes the participation of kids who do not fit the mold.

In the realm of actual performance, Bruhanski will be initiating Salt Spring Island Soap — a real, on-going, serialized, live, after-hours melodrama. Based on the fictitious lives of "Island personalities," the production will incorporate rehearsed plot outlines and character development with improvisation on stage.

For all those anxious to start their journey to fame and fortune, auditions will be held on Sunday, September 14, at 1 pm at Off Centre Stage.

In mid-October, two one-act plays will be offered on the same evening. Harold Pinter's one-act play, The Lover, will be Bruhanski's first comedy production on the island and he will share the performance with Karin Klokstad.

The evening will also see the staging of the play, The Day I sat down on the sundeck with Jesus, a wind came up and blew my kimono open and he saw my breast. Gloria Sawai, a B. C. writer, is the author, and Laurie Clark will be performing this intriguing scenario.

The story of Helen Keller is familiar to most of us. The Miracle Worker is the drama that launched the careers of Patty Duke and Anne Bancroft in the cinema.

Karin Klokstad, who appeared recently in Night Mother, which is being planned for the last week in November.

The play will provide plenty of opportunity for local talent. There will be eight parts and auditions will commence in late October.

Artcraft sales up 20 per cent

By KATHI SINGBEIL

September 1 brought to a close the eighteenth annual Artcraft Show. It has been a terrific show with gross sales reaching $226,000 -- up 20 per cent over the previous year.

Eighty per cent of the take is returned directly to the contributing artists and artisans of the Gulf Islands; 10 per cent covers the costs of putting on the show; and the remaining 10 per cent is returned to the community in the form of bursaries to individuals pursuing studies in the arts, grants to groups involved in community art projects, and art and craft programmes.

Congratulations and thanks to all of the contributing artists for their varied and beautiful works, which are giving the Gulf Islands a strong artistic image in the 'outer world,' drawing old customers back every year for the quality, work, and bringing new admirers.

Congratulations and thanks also to the Artcraft staff and the Community Arts Council's committee for the presentation of another wonderful show of Gulf Islands arts.

Every year, Artcraft holds a raffle to raise funds to refurbish Mahon Hall. Over the past few years the proceeds of the raffle have been buying new windows for the hall. This year the prize -- a Joyce Mitchell watercolour -- was won by S. Mitchell of Victoria (no relation, to our knowledge!) Thank you, Joyce Mitchell, for donating the watercolour scene, a totem on a beach.

A second Arts Council raffle awarded three prizes: first prize, a stool by Illyd Perkins, was won by Darryl Lee of Fulford Harbour; second prize, a bracelet by Craig Wright, went to Janice Hearty of Ganges; third prize, a silk scarf by Margie Korrison, was won by Murray Phimaster of Calgary. Thank you to the artists who donated their prizes, and to everyone who purchased raffle tickets to support the arts in this community.

The winner of the annual $500 bursary given to a secondary student continuing a course of studies in an art program is Roderick Roodenburg of Salt Spring Island. Roderick is a terrifically versatile artist with work in ceramics, commercial art, watercolour, print and photography. The CAC will have an exhibition of his work at the Ewart Gallery of Fine Arts this coming spring. Roderick will be entering his second year at Emily Carr, where he will further his painting studies.

There were no applications for the $500 bursary for a student leaving grade 12 and entering an art course of study at a secondary school.

Wall hanging for Red Deer made on Pender Island

A fabric sculpture consisting of 22 silk diagonal units was created on North Pender Island this summer for the new Red Deer Arts Centre.

Summer resident Margaret King was one of 15 artists chosen by a panel of architects — including Arthur Erickson — to construct a fabric wall hanging in one of the art centre's music rooms. Soundproof linings will absorb sound in the small practice rooms, adding acoustic as well as aesthetic value.

King, a Calgary woman who spends her summers on Pender, was assisted by two island residents. Pat Thorne and Sheila Atkins both helped King with a good deal of the intricate and time-consuming work. Each individual unit, called an arcite, required quilted padding, support rods and hand-sewing of fine edges.

Thorne, who took a silk painting course with King on Pender a few years ago, also studied art and fabric painting at the Vancouver School of Art and Capilano College. Atkins said she has done a lot of sewing on Pender, and helped King by making the soundproof linings for the arcites.

The dying process is an important aspect of the work. King uses a Japanese technique of dying called Bokashi, which blends colours from light to dark, offering a subtle transition through the spectrum.

King, who studied Fine Arts at the Leicester College of Art in England and textiles at the Alberta College of Art, said the damp coastal climate is especially suited to the Japanese method of dying. She said the technique calls for a slow drying time, explaining that the longer the dye is exposed to the fabric, the better the bond is.

In Calgary, she has to introduce a good deal of humidity. "You just can't reproduce the sea climate, so the dampness here is actually very good for this particular technique," she said.

In addition, she likes to come to the coast because the landscape offers inspiration and ideas. Last summer she worked here on a fabric sculpture called Spaces In Between for the Muttart Gallery in Calgary.

"People who saw this exhibit said all my pieces were about Pender Island," said King, explaining that her ideas came from watching the spaces in between trees in a forest.

King is particularly happy about the building where her work from this summer will be hung. "It is a beautiful brick building. I was so excited when I saw the building because so much attention was paid to detail. It just couldn't be more perfect," she said.

An opening celebration for the new arts centre is scheduled for October.

King plans to return to Pender next summer to work on another project, but doesn't know yet just what form her next sculpture will take.

Valerie and Patrick Gaines

Richards, Gaines are wed

Church was crowded near to capacity on Friday afternoon when Valerie Elizabeth Richards and Patrick Howard Gaines exchanged vows in St. Paul's Church at Fulford Harbour.

Bride is the daughter of Frank and Barbara Richards of Ganges and the bridegroom's parents are Dick and Norma Gaines of Gibson's Landing. Rev. Fr. P.A. Bergin, OMI, officiated.

Former Salt Spring Island resident Frank Havies was best man. Matron of honour was the sister of the bride, Jill Byron. Damian Richards and Joshua Byron, nephews of the bride, were ushers.

Joy Johnsen was organist.

Reception followed at the Salt Spring Island Golf Club, with Tony Richards as master of ceremonies. George Jessup of Duncan called the toast to the bride.

Dancing followed dinner to the music of Les Four.

Valerie Gaines has been a member of the staff at Driftwood, working in various capacities. The bridegroom has been an island resident and is a notable Vancouver Island sportsman. He played for a number of seasons with the Salt Spring Island Slugs and has more recently played with the Victoria Royals and Payless fastball teams.

The couple will reside in Victoria.

Revenues surpass $2 billion

Records in total revenues, domestic and export electric revenues and domestic gas revenues were achieved by B.C. Hydro in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1986.

Total revenues surpassed $2 billion for the first time, providing the utility with a net income of $12 million.

Domestic electric revenues improved by $61 million over the previous year while domestic gas revenues were up by $8 million.

Export sales of surplus electricity exceeded the previous best in 1982 by $19 million, putting the new record at $252 million.

In the Report of the Directors, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Chester Johnson cited extensive marketing efforts in the United States and lower than average water levels in Pacific Northwest reservoirs for export successes. He said they accounted for 22 per cent of electric sales volume and aligned B.C. Hydro with Hydro Quebec as leaders in terms of total electric energy sold to the U.S.

Reflecting on the addition of Revelstoke's generating capacity, Johnson noted the demonstrated value of the project in terms of customer service levels as well as direct benefit to the provincial economy. Pointing out that Revelstoke had enabled Hydro to satisfy record peak demands, which exceeded previous records by 10 per cent, during exceptionally cold weather last November, the chairman added:

"Revelstoke provided the provincial government with the opportunity to introduce programs allowing qualifying firms in the forest and mining sectors to purchase power on a short-term basis at discount rates. In this way, the province's current energy surplus has been used, through the Critical Industries Act and the Industrial Electricity Rate Discount Act, to create or sustain more than 700 jobs. Hydro benefitted through increased revenues that otherwise would have not been forthcoming."

On future prospects, Johnson felt that an improving economy combined with further operating efficiency measures will contribute directly to Hydro's goal of "no rate increases for the next five years other than those directly related to issues over which management has no control."

down through the years

with Driftwood

Twenty-five years ago

- The Salt Spring Island Golf and Country Club has become a reality, replacing the Salt Spring Island Golf Club. The new club decided to use the charter of the old one, dating back to 1928, as a basis for its operations. A seven-man executive was elected at the inaugural meeting and plans to improve the course were made.
- For rent: Modern two-room, furnished cottage. Electric hot water, combination electric and wood stove and refrigerator. $30 per month.
- The Ganges Old-timers walloped the Fulford All-stars 15 to 10 in the first of what is hoped to become an annual game of softball. The youngsters tried valiantly, but could not overcome the experience and guile of the Fat, Forty and Foolish club.

Twenty years ago

- A Vancouver man had a close brush with disaster when his cabin cruiser caught fire. The incident occurred off Beaver Point and the man took to a dinghy when his fire-extinguishing efforts proved futile. He was rescued and the burned hull towed to Moresby Island by a police boat.
- For rent: All-electric, furnished two-bedroom house. $75 per month.
- The Alex McManus Trophy, emblematic of the horseshoe pitching championship on Salt Spring Island, was won by the Ed Lumley and Earl Morris team. The pitching pair took the measure of teams from Duncan, Courtenay, Victoria and Salt Spring.

- The Rose Bowl, a trophy for the winner of the ladies softball game between Ganges and Fulford, was taken by the Fulford ladies. The final score was 23 to 20.

Fifteen years ago

- The boat launching ramp at Montague Harbour on Galiano Island had been ruined beyond repair. The structure was being used to load a rock-crusher onto a barge for shipment to Salt Spring, when the mishap occurred. The rock-crusher had been on Galiano as part of the road construction at the north end of the island.
- A series of public meetings to discuss interim zoning bylaws are being held on various Gulf Islands. The meetings are part of the preparations for formal hearings on the zoning plans.

Ten Years ago

- Vandals destroyed trees in Centennial Park, raising the anger of Salt Spring Island residents. Parks and recreation commission chairman Glenn Woodley has asked people to watch the park in an effort to stop the destruction of trees, which were planted as a memorial to Salt Spring pioneers.

- The post office has announced the increased cost of a postage stamp from eight to ten cents.

Five years ago

- A reward of $2,000 is still being offered on Salt Spring Island for information leading to the conviction of the person or persons responsible for setting the quarter-million-dollar fire in Welbury Bay.

The fire occurred on August 21, when the scow loaded with plastic pipe for the Ganges sewer project was set on fire.

FUEL FOR THOUGHT

From the time humans first learned to walk, we have constantly been looking for new and better means of mobility – and new sources of energy to make our mobility even more efficient.

For example, at Expo 86 in Vancouver this year, you can see Canada's first magnetically powered rapid transit system. You can also find out more about alternative fuels for your car, such as propane, natural gas, and even alcohol. And an entire fleet of electrically powered vehicles will visit Expo 86.

Find out what's next.

Keep informed and up to date on current technology and the future of transportation energy.
